Every Man for Himself Aboard B.C. Ferries—Black

Highways Minister Wesley Black says it's every man for himself when it comes to locating lifejackets and other life-saving equipment in emergencies aboard B.C. ferries.

Black, minister responsible for the ferry service, was commenting on claims by passengers on the Queen of Victoria that crew members did not keep them informed on what was happening or what emergency procedures were to be followed after it was hit by a Soviet freighter Sunday.

"When I get on the ferry, it is my responsibility to know where the lifejackets are," he said.

"It is my responsibility wherever I sit to know where the muster station is. We don't carry enough crew to provide and hand out lifejackets to people."

"The diagrams are there, how to put them on. People for their own safety are supposed to do that."

Black said he was not "faulting" the people who have complained "for becoming distressed in a situation where they didn't carry out their responsibility."

Three ferry passengers, including a seven-month-old baby boy, died when the sharp bow of the 14,700-ton Sergey Yesenin sliced into the mid-section of the ship.

Black said:

"As far as information from the bridge is concerned, the person in command was on the bridge. The responsibility he had would have been pretty terrific and he did the right thing all the way down the piece."

He said a worse tragedy may have been avoided because of the coolness of the crew.

Black sent a message to the captain and crew of the Queen of Victoria, congratulating them on the "excellent job" they did.

Asked if in an emergency such as Sunday's collision, someone should have advised the passengers on the situation and subsequent procedures, Mr. Black said:

"Yes, if it is so, but how do you account for human error? Leaving the iodine bottle open in the bathroom, leaving roller skates under the staircase, and so on?"

"You can't win them all,

you can't provide for every emergency no matter how well-trained your people are, and our people are well-trained, despite what passengers might say."

The minister said the lack of information given to passengers over the ship's public address system was a factor in avoiding panic.

The ship's captain, busy with more urgent problems, "kept his cool" in the moments after the crash.

Black said.

"There was no announcement to panic people," he said.

On complaints that crew members didn't tell passengers where to find lifejackets, Black said:

"It's perfectly obvious that the crew cannot wait hand and foot on every passenger on a ship."

"It's the same as going into a hotel and not looking where the fire exits are."

Ceasefire May Exceed Target

UNITED NATIONS (CP)—Gunnar V. Jarring, the UN special Middle East mediator, engaged in intensive behind-the-scenes activity today amid predictions a 90-day Arab-Israeli ceasefire will be proclaimed before the end of the week.

Israeli Pullout Possible

JERUSALEM (CP)—Israel has told the United States the withdrawal of its forces from Arab territory occupied in the 1967 war "will be determined in the peace agreement" with the Arab states, Premier Golda Meir announced today.

Informing the Knesset (parliament) of her government's detailed reply to the U.S. peace plan, Mrs. Meir made it clear that no Israeli soldier will be withdrawn from the present ceasefire lines until a binding agreement is reached.

"The ceasefire lines will be replaced only by secure and recognized boundaries in a contractual peace," she said.

The mention of the word "withdrawal" in the Israeli reply is believed to be the first time it has been officially mentioned by the Israeli government.

The government coalition lost its second largest group of supporters as it easily defeated a no-confidence motion by a vote of 64 to 5 over its acceptance of the U.S. peace plan. The right-wing Gahal party quit the government over the issue and did not participate in the vote on the motion proposed by the small, ultra-nationalist Free Centre party.

Captives Face Long Wait

MONTEVIDEO, Uruguay (Reuters)—A kidnapped American security official and a Brazilian diplomat today faced the prospect of prolonged captivity after the government rejected guerrilla demands for the release of political prisoners in exchange for their freedom.

The Tupamaros urban guerrilla organization demanded that the government release all political prisoners in Uruguayan jails and send them to Cuba, Mexico or Peru.

Guerrillas Friday abducted Daniel A. Mitrione, 49, an employee of the U.S. Agency for International Development who was advising the Uruguayan government on security techniques.

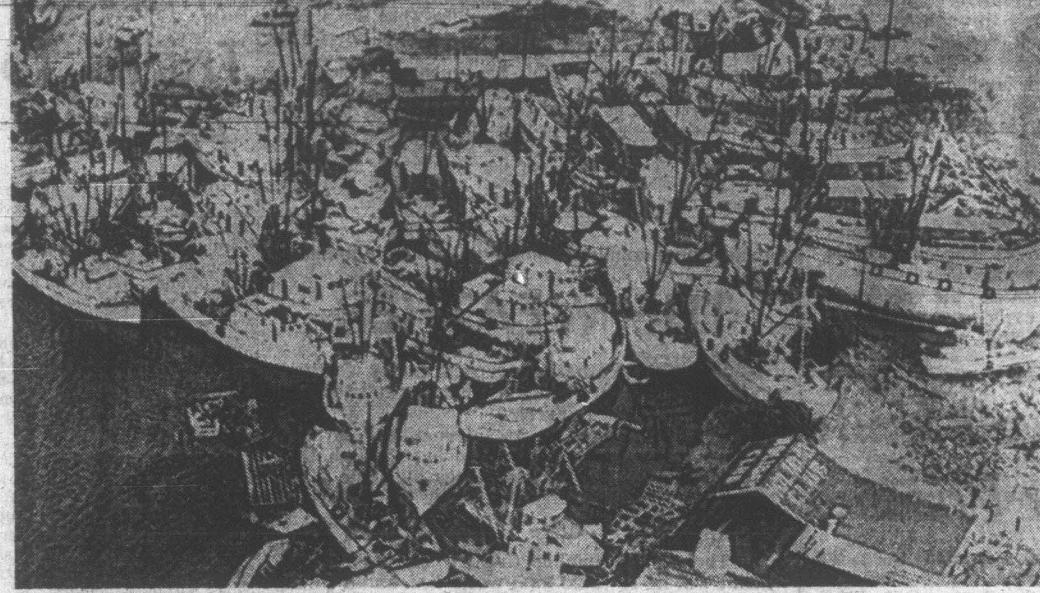

They also abducted Aloisio Mares Dias Comides, 41, second secretary and assistant consul-general at the Brazilian embassy.

HEADED FOR MEXICO, GOING STRONG

Hurricane Blasts Through Texas

CORPUS CHRISTI, Tex. (AP)—Hurricane Celia smashed this city and nearby towns Monday night and today before battering its way into Mexico, still virile and destructive.

At least 18 persons died as Celia swept from Cuba into the U.S. coast of the Gulf of Mexico and then into Mexico. No one could count the injured here, and the shocked Corpus Christi survivors made no immediate effort to assess the huge monetary losses.

Kadafi spent 18 hours in Iraq but apparently failed to iron out the dispute between the two countries. Baghdad radio declared that Iraqis would "resist the American plan to the end."

Kadafi, who has been acting as an Arab mediator, arrived today in Syria, which also opposes the plan but not as strongly as the Iraqis.

A strategy conference of Arab defence and foreign was postponed to await the outcome of Kadafi's peace-making.

GAHAL QUIT

In Tel Aviv, the right-wing Gahal party voted Monday night to quit Premier Golda Meir's coalition government in protest of Israel's acceptance of the plan. The walkout was not expected to affect Israeli policy since the other coalition parties still control 72 of the 120 seats in Israel's parliament.

Gahal's decision to leave the government came about by such a narrow majority following a stormy meeting of its central committee that some observers felt its liberal wing might break away. The vote was 117 to 112.

Jarring arranged separate meetings today with chief UN delegates Abdullah El-Erian of Egypt, Mohammad El-Farrar of Jordan and Yosef Takash of Israel.

OTHER MEETINGS

He also planned to meet with the UN ambassadors from the Big Four nations—the United States, Britain, France and the Soviet Union—who have been trying for months to agree on a peace formula for the Middle East.

Meanwhile, the Israeli military command announced that one of its warplanes was shot down Monday during a raid on Egyptian anti-aircraft missile bases in the central sector of the Suez canal.

windows popped slivers of glass into the streets like shrapnel.

Four were known dead and a fifth was presumed drowned here. Celia caused one death in Cuba while she still was only a storm. On Florida's coast, 12 persons were drowned because of underwater tides and rough waters spawned by the hurricane.

About 250 miles northwest of Corpus Christi on the Mexican border, Celia set off a tornado in the Del Rio-Eagle Pass section that destroyed a barn and trees.

Rains of 4.25 inches fell in the area. Streets and bridges were awash in Eagle Pass

Irish Bombers Step Up Activity

BELFAST (AP)—A wave of riot and bomb attacks spread over Northern Ireland early today as the Roman Catholic minority stepped up their campaign against the British Army.

Twenty-five soldiers were injured by rock-throwing mobs in Belfast, the provincial capital. Troops replied with wave after wave of tear gas and repeated baton charges.

A bomb planted in a parked car shattered windows around Townsend Street on the Protestant side of the year-old "peace line" dividing Belfast's main Protestant and Catholic areas.

Across the line in Divis Street troops invaded a Catholic housing development from which they had been bombarded for an hour. The troops seized stockpiles of gasoline bombs and rocks from the balconies of high rise apartment.

In Newry, close to the border with the southern Irish Republic, explosions damaged a bus station and a British Legion hall. Another gelignite bomb was found in a Belfast branch bank and dismantled by the army.

The Mexican foreign ministry said the Athena rocket, lost July 11 on a test flight from Utah, carved a radioactive trench 50 feet long, 17 feet wide and 10 feet deep when it crashed in an isolated meadow north of Carrillo.

NEWS FLASHES

Few on Strike

OTTAWA (CP)—Strike action against the post office was light today with only some 100 letter carriers in Kitchener, Ont., reported off the job.

Cabinet Resigns

LA PAZ (AP)—Bolivian President Alfredo Ovando received the resignation of his cabinet today after three weeks of political crisis.

Horror Story Told

NAIROBI, Kenya (Reuters)—A witness has told a United Nations group that Portuguese authorities in Mozambique put political prisoners in weightless sacks and dropped them into the sea to retrieve the bits of wreckage.

The Mexican foreign ministry said the Athena rocket, lost July 11 on a test flight from Utah, carved a radioactive trench 50 feet long, 17 feet wide and 10 feet deep when it crashed in an isolated meadow north of Carrillo.

Bombing Admitted

SAIGON (AP)—American officials in Saigon admitted today that U.S. planes are bombing in Cambodia in response to requests from Cambodian authorities.

The film shows the Russian ship moving into the pass in mid-channel, about 200 yards from Helen Point. The two seiners can be seen hugging the shoreline.

The freighter appears to swing well into mid-channel at between eight and 10 knots, pushed by about two knots of tide.

About 10 seconds before impact, the Soviet ship belched black smoke, probably indicating it went into full reverse. The freighter appeared to be almost dead in the water.

question, Nixon said "what appears was certainly a massacre" at My Lai "and under no circumstances was it justified."

The day afterward, attorneys for Lt. William L. Calley Jr. of several charged in the slayings of scores of Vietnamese civilians at My Lai, asked for dismissal of charges because "his rights and privileges under the constitution . . . have been prejudicially and substantially impaired" by pretrial publicity, including the president's statement.

Nixon said he meant no criticism of the news media, but he was concerned that a young attitude seemed to be influenced by crime reporting that tends to "glorify and make heroes out of those who engage in criminal activities."

During his ten days on the west coast, the president said the Manson trial was on page one of the newspapers and received prominent attention on television. After pronouncing Manson guilty of eight murders, Nixon added:

"Here is a man, yet, who, as far as the coverage was concerned, appeared to be rather a glamorous figure, a glamorous figure to the young people, whom he had brought into his operations, and also, another thing that was noted was the fact that two lawyers in the case—two lawyers who were, as anyone who could read any of the stories could tell—who were guilty of the most outrageous, contemptuous action in the courtroom, and who were ordered to jail overnight by the judge, seem to be more the oppressed, and the judge seemed to be the villain."

Within half an hour after the president spoke, White House Press Secretary Ronald L. Ziegler called reporters into session to "clarify" the president's remarks.

Ziegler started out saying that Nixon was really referring to "alleged charges" against Manson and that "his intention" was to show the harm that could be done to the court system by media putting "dramatic focus" on a trial such as Manson's. Later Ziegler ventured the opinion, "I think I've retracted the sentence."

Reporters still seemed unconvinced that Nixon, a lawyer, could have made a flat-out statement of Manson's guilt while his trial was going on. In light of this rather remarkable presidential declaration, they asked at a subsequent briefing with Attorney-General John N. Mitchell what the president's lawyer thought about it.

"I don't think it is necessary for the attorney-general to comment on a case proceeding through the state courts," Mitchell replied. Then he added, "I don't believe the president made a charge or implied one."

The president's mimeographed statement upon reaching Washington was even stronger.

"The last thing I would do is prejudice the legal rights of any person, in any circumstances," it said in part. ". . . The defendants should be presumed to be innocent at this stage of their trial."

Ziegler indicated the president had learned of early news reports of his Denver statement while flying to Washington.

Queen Mother and Powell Unite To Arrange Reunion for Prisoner

LONDON (CP) — A Londoner who has spent 11 of the last 12 years in prison was being re-united with his long-separated son today, and he gave thanks to the Queen Mother and Enoch Powell, the political controversialist of the Conservative party.

Thomas Smith, 50, said the Queen Mother and Powell, each without the other's knowledge, combined to locate his son in the army at Gibraltar and to have him flown to London for the reunion.

Smith appealed from jail to the Queen Mother, who is 70 today, and Powell, a wartime brigadier whose views on racial issues have sometimes rocked his party. Today's secret reunion was arranged for shortly after Smith's release from his latest sentence.

"They were absolutely marvelous to me and they have given me terrific happiness," he said. "I'll never be able to repay them."

Smith lost track of his 11-year-old son Michael 12 years ago.

WIFE DIED "My wife died and then I was sent to prison. My boy was sent to foster parents and I thought it best that I keep out of his life. But as the years passed I wanted to see him again."

Powell discovered a year ago that the son had joined the my release."

FISHBOATS TO BLAME?

the water, no bow wave is visible.

The Sergey Yesenin's high, sharp bow sliced into the ferry like an axe amidships, peeling back her hull and ripping through three decks.

"The noise when they hit seemed to go on and on," said Johnson.

"It wasn't a crash, just a loud, continuous grinding."

CARS DAMAGED The ferry's busy promenade deck, ordered cleared only seconds before the collision, was mangled, while plates on the sun deck below buckled. About 20 cars on the car deck below were damaged, half of them beyond repair.

Ann Hammond, 31, of Victoria, was fatally injured and her seven-month-old son, Peter, was killed as they sat in their car. Sheila Taylor, 17, of Allendale, N.J., was sitting in the enclosed sun deck lounge. Her lifeless body was found later on top of a car below.

B.C. Ferry Authority investigators viewed Johnson's film Monday and the department of transport inquiry was to hear representatives of the Russian freighter today.

Meanwhile, RCMP fear the toll could go higher as ferry passengers arrived at their destinations and missing persons were reported.

Asked what jurisdiction the Canadian inquiry has over foreign ships, he said:

"We could suspend the officers' certificates on the ships involved, if the officers were found at fault, but this applies only to Canadian and United Kingdom registrations."

"However, I have no reason to believe that the Russians are any less severe than we are in these inquiries, and I should imagine they will be holding their own investigation into the accident to see if anyone of their people was at fault."

H. O. Buchanan, regional director of the marine transport division, said Monday that freighters travelling to Vancouver have no constant route and "sometimes go around the islands and sometimes go through Active Pass."

The Russian freighter continued from Vancouver with its cargo of steel and cars. The Queen of Victoria turned back to Tsawwassen under escort and was later moved to Burrard Drydock in North Vancouver.

Ferry Passengers Wary of Liferafts

"Nobody wanted to go in them—people were leery," a Saanich woman said today of the passengers' reaction to getting into liferafts after the collision Sunday of the Russian freighter, Sergey Yesenin, and the British Columbia government ferry Queen of Victoria in Active Pass.

Mrs. James Goodfellow, 43, of Ridgewood Crescent, was describing the hesitation moments before she and her husband got into the tent-like liferaft with a capacity of 25 persons and were lowered into the water.

Mrs. Goodfellow said a pleasure craft took the raft in tow to the fishboat Cape Churchill, standing by where the 25 passengers were taken aboard and served candy, tea and soft drinks by the crew.

RETURNED TO FERRY She said they spent about an hour on the Cape Churchill before it was decided that they should return to the ferry.

The Goodfowells were in the ferry's cafeteria having tea when the collision occurred.

"My husband heard the engines stop and then reverse and said 'hang on, we're going to hit something.'

Plates, food, coffee urns with hot water were thrown first one into the water from a weekend in Vancouver, she said, at the force of the impact and then the other as the ship settled back.

Passengers in the cafeteria waited about 30 seconds after the collision before moving to the decks.

Mrs. Goodfellow said passengers on the deck were putting on lifejackets from the storage boxes.

"We put on lifejackets and stood back."

The ferry crew were attempting to get passengers into the liferafts but with some hesitation before the first raft, with the Canadian pilot is aboard, the command of the ship is held by the Russian captain.

ONLY RAFT IN WATER

Mrs. Goodfellow said their raft was the only one to go into the water with passengers although others were ready to be used.

"As far as I was concerned, they were all very good to us," she said of the crew.

She said the trip back to Tsawwassen seemed to take forever. She added that she thought the investigating police officers could have been put aboard during the journey back because passengers were kept on the stricken ferry for about an hour after it had reached the terminal.

The Goodfowells were returning from a weekend in Vancouver.

SEWAGE CONTRACT AWARDED

PORT ALBERNI, B.C. (CP) — Dillingham Corp. of Vancouver was awarded a $918,000 contract to build the first phase of a $1.5 million sewage project in this southern Vancouver Island community. It was announced today.

Work will begin immediately on the project, which involves construction of sewage lines to intercept the outflow of raw sewage into the Alberni Canal.

The project is scheduled for completion by the end of this

Opening Set

TERRACE (CP) — British Columbia's ninth regional vocational school will be opened here Aug. 11 by Premier W. A. C. Bennett. The school had its first classes two years ago before construction was completed.

The Goodfowells were returning from a weekend in Vancouver.

Book Says LBJ Despised Wilson

WASHINGTON (Reuters) — A new book says President Johnson despised former British prime minister Wilson and felt betrayed by Wilson's Vietnam and Southeast Asia defence policies.

The book by Louis Heren, chief Washington correspondent of the London Times, says Johnson, who left the White House 18 months ago, felt Wilson played politics with the Vietnam war while denying the United States any military support there.

In the book, No Hall, No Farewell, published by Harper and Row of New York, Heren quotes Dean Rusk, secretary of state in the Johnson administration, as telling him: "All we needed was one regiment. The Black Watch would have done. Just one regiment, but you (British) wouldn't. Well, don't expect us to save you again. They can invade Sussex, and we wouldn't do a damn thing about it."

Heren says that when he called on Johnson at the White House one night in 1968, he found the president in a bitter mood, especially when he discussed Wilson, whose Labor party was defeated in last June's general election.

"Johnson despised the Social ist prime minister, and made little effort to stifle his feelings.

"Wilson's gratuitous advice on the need for restraint in Vietnam, and his earlier insistence that only a narrow gap between the positions of Washington and Hanoi had to be bridged to bring about peace, reduced Johnson to the horned expressions of the Texas hill country."

Johnson also was angered by Wilson's decision to withdraw British troops from Singapore and the Persian Gulf, a move the Johnson administration believed would add to its defence burdens in Southeast Asia.

Heren says that during his time at the White House, Johnson "made it quite plain that he had a low opinion of all Churchill's successors."

Heren gives Johnson high marks for his drive for social welfare programs, especially civil rights for Negroes, after he entered the White House following the assassination of President Kennedy.

But the book is critical of his Vietnam policies, claiming he conducted a secret war in the hope that it would end with a quick victory and justify his decision to intervene militarily on behalf of the South Vietnamese authorities in Saigon.

THE WEATHER

Victoria's weatherman expects cloudy weather to invade the area Wednesday, but he can't tell yet what time it's due to arrive.

The weather office at International Airport said an active storm system moving through the Gulf of Alaska will spread clouds over the area sometime Wednesday. Temperatures will stay about the same, with an overnight low of 50 and a high Wednesday of 70.

The winds running through Juan de Fuca Strait will be 15 to 20 mph westerlies, and a small craft warning is in effect. Around the city area, winds will be southwesterly 15.

Democracy Crumbling — Witnesses

TORONTO (CP) — More than 30,000 Jehovah's Witnesses attended their annual convention at Woodbine racetrack.

They packed the track grandstand and sprawled on the grass as director Leo Greenless of the Watch Tower Bible Society predicted the imminent end of democracy.

"Theocratic rule will hold sway," he said. "Those appointed representatives will answer for their conduct in office not to the people, but to God's anointed king, Jesus Christ."

Jehovah's Witnesses believe the Bible forbids blood transfusions and Toronto lawyer Glen How told the delegates from southern Ontario and the border states at Saturday's meeting that their stand is medically sound.

"Blood transfusions are outdated," he said. "There just is no case now where people can't choose an alternative."

"Secretly in your heart you may think the doctor is right, that your child will die without transfusion. But when Jehovah denies his people something, it has been to hurt or protect them?"

Peace Prize Received

TOKYO (AP) — Akira Iwai, secretary-general of Sohyo, Japan's 4.2-million-member General Council of Trade Unions, has received the Lenin Peace Prize for 1970. The presentation was made at the Soviet Embassy in Tokyo. Iwai is the fifth Japanese to receive the Soviet award, which consists of a gold medal and $27,778.

He said ships sail about nine miles off their route to Vancouver from Victoria by using the pass.

Roy Covington, superintendent of pilotage for the department, said Russian ships, which arrive in Vancouver on an average of one every 10 days, use the pilot. But he added that although the Canadian pilot is aboard, the command of the ship is held by the Russian captain.

Grounds Seen For Appeal

MULGRAVE, N.S. (CP) — Homer Stevens, president of the United Fishermen and Allied Workers Union, said today there appeared to be grounds for an appeal by the union against a British Columbia Supreme Court decision awarding $107,825 damages to fishing vessel owners.

Stevens said he had not yet received a copy of the 47-page judgment by Mr. Justice Gordon Rae, but from discussions with other union officials in B.C. "It seems unanimous that it must be appealed and that there's good grounds for an appeal."

The UFAWU executive had no chance to discuss the ruling because its members are spread along the West Coast where the fishing season is in full swing, he said.

"Blood transfusions are outdated," he said. "There just is no case now where people can't choose an alternative."

China Charges 'Collusion'

In Middle East Peace Bid

HONG KONG (WP) — China's response to the initial acceptance of American Mideast peace proposals has been stepped-up attacks on Soviet-American "collusion" and renewed pledges of support for continued armed struggle.

Egyptian, Jordanian and Israeli acceptances of the proposals have not been reported in the Chinese press.

Instead, from the day of Cairo's agreement, Peking has increased the volume in its warnings against what it calls "political fraud."

Although China's influence in the Middle East is minute, it is pursuing the same policy there as in Indochina — urging protracted war and opposition to any negotiated settlement.

The latest Chinese statement on the Mideast appears to be on each side could be extended to protect the cities.

But by the time the SALT treaty takes effect, probably next year, both sides will have so many missiles, and so many of them with multiple warheads (MRVs or MIRVs) that the rival retaliatory forces remain in some degree of danger. This would not be changed unless a later SALT pact drastically reduced the quantity of such weapons.

As President Johnson's science adviser, Donald F. Hornig, recently put it: "So long as the cities remain hostage to nuclear retaliation, each side feels some security." It is this thesis that will be continued if the SALT agreement outlaws all or nearly all ABM systems which on each side could be extended to protect the cities.

After all, the basis of the nuclear peace is mutual deterrence; the fear each has that the other can impose by a second strike unacceptable damage if one side gambles on a first strike.

As President Johnson's science adviser, Donald F. Hornig, recently put it: "So long as the cities remain hostage to nuclear retaliation, each side feels some security." It is this thesis that will be continued if the SALT agreement outlaws all or duced the quantity of such weapons.

He reported that the Palestinian Liberation Organization had rejected the initiative, and the "Arab peoples who persist in fighting aggression are rising one after another in response."

Egypt's acceptance of the proposals on July 22 was the latest in a string of rebuffs

Cairo has given China's policies. The Egyptian move was particularly awkard for Peking, because it was announced just after China had made public a message from

Premier Chou En-lai to President Nasser conveying congratulations on Egypt's nation to impose a "Middle East Munich."

China began last February to try to woo Egypt away from its dependence on the Soviet Union, but met with no success. While Nasser replied to the initial overture in frosty terms, Moscow was remodeling Egypt's air defence system.

Yasser Arafat, chairman of the Palestine Liberation

Organization, however, responded "enthusiastically" to

and April. In his letter of thanks after visiting China,

the Palestinian guerrilla leader called China "the home of the revolutionaries

base of the world liberation movements" — terms almost identical to those China often uses to describe itself.

Other Arab leaders, however, have not warmed to Peking's rhetoric. They evi-

ently prefer the arms and other aid available from the Soviet Union, which in turn is eager to frustrate Chinese

Start of a Program

THE ACTION OF THE FEDERAL government in awarding the nation's communication satellite construction order to the Hughes Aircraft Co. of California is not the black and white Canadian-versus-American choice which it might appear to be. Careful consideration was given to the "Canadian" bid of RCA Ltd. of Montreal. But the consideration of cost left little argument. Those in charge of spending the public's money could not ignore the Hughes' bid of a maximum of $30 millions, compared with the RCA's $35 million target price which might have escalated to more than $50 millions before completion. There was, too, the factor of the Hughes' guarantee of a more sophisticated satellite and a past record of 17 successful units in orbit.

What aroused the most public discussion, however, was not cost but the degree of Canadian participation. RCA said 65 per cent of the work would be done by Canadians, compared with a promised 20 per cent by Hughes. But RCA itself is, of course, the subsidiary of a United States corporation. The degree of Canadian content in the satellite is important, not so much for the single device in prospect, but for the continuing development of Canadian expertise in this highly sophisticated and vital new field of electronics.

Devices such as the satellite, which will help in relaying broadcast and other communications to parts of Canada not now directly open to this service, may be viewed as essential components of the era into which we are now entering. The development of electronic communication, through satellite rebroadcasts from units put into stationary orbit over Canada, and of highly intricate private receiving stations for radio, television, music, news, weather reports and a host of other services, will be inevitable elements of life in the future.

For Canada, particularly, with its population stretched across a continent and its vast isolated northern areas, effective communication is a vital factor in maintaining our national entity. It is essential that we develop the equipment and that we develop the trained engineers and craftsmen who can supply us with it. To this extent the more components of the first satellite which are constructed in Canada the better.

A 20 per cent Canadian participation in this first venture is low, but acceptable, considering that the time element is also important and that the sooner we claim our orbit and get our satellite into space the more firmly established we will be in this highly competitive space industry. But for future work in satellites and the vast field of technology which accompanies them we should already be laying plans for Canadian initiative. As a nation we can no more afford to lag in electronics than we could in electrical development, in industrial engineering, in industrial or anti-pollution.

Canada's Water Resources

IN A SCANT 10 YEARS, IF NEW sources are not found, the United States will be able to meet only 85 per cent of its water needs, according to the Canadian Water Resources Association. And the cries from United States politicians for Canadian water are already as clear as the gurgling of a Canadian stream. Faced with requests — perhaps even demands — for 50 to 100 billion gallons of water each year, Canada will have to have a thorough assessment of its own needs in order to defend its position against the United States.

The federal government has been charting the flows of our major rivers since the turn of the century, and at present, the Toronto Globe and Mail reports, we have about 2,200 observation posts which check the streams, compared with about 10,000 such stations in the United States. But that is only part of the picture. Thousands of minor rivers and streams remain uncharted. North of the 60th parallel, where much of the uncharted water supply lies, there are only 85 metering stations, and assessing a river's volume takes years as seasonal flow varies up to 30 per cent.

Because of the unknown quantity of our water supply, we may be fooling ourselves in assuming that we have great water reservoirs. While our large supply of lake water is undisputed, selling lakes is like mining: they may be a non-renewable resource. In terms of ground-water, which is supposed to be the world's greatest source of usable water, Canada is deficient because of its more than one million square miles of permafrost, the pre-Cambrian shield and glacial effects. Nor is the great majority of our fresh water potential at present accessible.

Since it will take at least 10 years, according to most estimates, to get an adequate inventory of our water supplies, a Canadian water inventory is an urgent priority. Until we calculate our future needs and potential supplies not a drop of the precious resource should be negotiated. Casual water sales could result in Canada having the same epitaph as English poet John Keats: "Here lies one whose Name Is Written in Water."

Shifting Economy Effects Employment

WHILE MOUNTING UNEMPLOYMENT figures are a cause for concern the latest Dominion Bureau of Statistics figure provide insights into how the country's economy is shifting. Canada's manufacturing industries, which normally employ almost one quarter of the national work force, show a decline of one half of one per cent from last year, when manufacturing employment was up by 2.2 per cent over 1968. Government anti-inflation policies may account for much of the decline.

But despite the fact that employers are slowing expansion and cutting down on payrolls, service industries, also employing almost a quarter of the work force, report a 7.2 per cent employment increase in the last year. Mid-1969 figures were up only 5.1 per cent over mid-1968 figures. Agriculture and other primary industries provided 3.7 per cent fewer jobs in June this year than they did a year ago. Employment in transportation and other utilities was down to 710,000 from 736,000 a year ago.

Automation could be partially responsible for the employment decline in transportation and agricultural industries. But the boom in service industries employment — such things as dry cleaning plants, restaurants and automotive repairs — suggests that Canadians are still spending. And in the first five months of 1970 there were more than 170,000 persons absorbed into the labor force as a whole.

If people are increasing their spending on the relative luxuries provided by service industries and absorbing large numbers of persons into the work force, the economy is not in too deep a recession. As manufacturing becomes more specialized and people have more leisure, there are bound to be alterations in the labor force. Declining figures in agriculture and transportation are an indication of major changes in emphasis.

"...remember...as soon as you arrive there, start beefing about the shape of the table and the seating arrangements..."

FROM OTTAWA

Can Canada Erase Aboriginal Rights?

THE department of Indian affairs, in the face of a request from a broadly representative Eskimo conference at Coppermine for recognition of "our rights as aborigines in the lands of the North," has reiterated the extraordinary position of last year that the government does not recognize aboriginal rights. In regard to the claims, a policy paper observes:

"These are so general and undefined that it is not realistic to think of them as specific claims capable of remedy except through a policy and program that will end injustice to Indians as members of the Canadian community."

It is highly probable that the Canadian Eskimos were encouraged to make representations at this time by the fact that the United States is making a large and costly settlement with the Eskimos of Alaska. Mr. Chretien has observed on television that the two cases are different, since the Americans bought Alaska from Russia.

Unquestionably there are differences. The Americans saved their aborigines from a Russian future. Many peoples, the Czechs, for example, might feel that such a service definitely lessened the U.S. obligation.

U.S. Example

The significance of the projected American settlement and of contemporary development in the Canadian North is doubtless that they have given the Eskimos and some Indians (the Eskimos according to a Supreme Court decision are legally Indians) much greater appreciation of the potential value of their claims. Had there been a settlement years ago when the government had no doubts about the aboriginal title, the cost would have been small. Now, because of government's neglect, the prospective bill is high. So the claims, in the government's view, have become so general and undefined that it is not realistic to think of them as specific and "capable of remedy."

The moral argument, to say the least of it is elusive. A small debt is valid and honored by government; if it becomes too large it becomes invalid and the government is entitled to renounce.

Reports suggest that Indians and Eskimos have difficulty in following the government's reasoning. White citizens may have the same problem.

The policy statement quoted above hopelessly confuses two quite separate things. It suggests that the claims will be satisfied by a policy and program that will end injustice to Indians as members of the Canadian community. But the government surely has a responsibility to end injustice, so far as possible, to all groups in the community whether they are red, white, black or any other color. What minister would deny this? Moreover, this responsibility, whatever its dimensions, would have existed if there had never been any aboriginal rights or treaties based upon them.

Compensation Principle

If the government expropriates a man's house it does not refuse compensation on the ground that he enjoys the same benefits in the form of family allowances, medicare, the Canada Pension Plan and so on possessed by other citizens whether they have ever owned houses or not. It recognizes by compensation a particular right, but in the case of the Eskimos it proposes to submerge this by unilateral decision in the generality of rights enjoyed by Canadians.

In order to do this, and so to dodge its obligations, the government is borrowing from the techniques of Stalin. It is rewriting the history of the country. Stalin limited himself more or less to some three decades. But Ottawa, no piker in these matters, proposes to wipe out two centuries.

The record goes back at least to the Royal Proclamation of 1763 which declared it "just and reasonable and essential to our interest and the security of our colonies that the several nations or tribes of Indians with whom we are connected or who live under our protection should not be molested or disturbed in the possession of such parts of our Dominions and territories as not having been ceded to or purchased by us are reserved to them or any of them as their hunting grounds."

It also provided that no individual could acquire title to land except through the Crown as intermediary and it set out a procedure for acquisition by the Crown: "If at any time any of the said Indians should be inclined to dispose of the said lands the same shall be purchased only for us in our name at some public meeting or assembly of the said Indians to be held for that purpose...."

Selkirk Example

While this did not apply at the time of Rupertsland, presumably because the Hudson's Bay company was not then in the land business, the principle was observed later. Thus Lord Selkirk was required to negotiate with the Indians before placing settlers on the land. With the transfer of the country to the Dominion, Parliament in its first address to Her Majesty promised to settle the question of Indian claims in conformity with the principles honored by the British Crown.

Except where matters were simply neglected, practice accorded with this. Cessions of territory were made by treaty, the consent of the Indians being obtained at meetings (and subsequent adhesion of bands down to 1930). If there was no aboriginal title, what was the point of including such language as the following in Treaty Number 11 covering the Mackenzie? "The said Indians do hereby cede, release, surrender and yield up to the government... all their rights titles and privileges whatsoever to the lands included within the following limits...."

No doubt the bargains were bad from the Indian point of view, some worse than others. What the government offered was niggardly but at least it paid something to extinguish the Indian title.

If there was an aboriginal title — and this was conceded for two inconvenient centuries — it must have been shared by all the native people. But the government, which always took the initiative in these matters, has not yet settled, or even attempted to settle, with the Eskimos. Being in default and alarmed by the prospects, it now says that it does not recognize aboriginal rights.

Indian Complaints

The Indians maintain that some treaty provisions have been dishonored. Certainly some treaties have not been implemented; the Mackenzie land question, for example, having been left in abeyance to the present day. This argument sufficiently impressed the government that it sought for some time to establish a treaty claims commission. But the basis of the treaties was an aboriginal title, what confidence can Indians have that anything will be done about infractions of treaties that rested on nothing?

Naturally, the government offers all sorts of reassurances, but even if its intentions are excellent the Indians can have no particular reason for confidence. After all, the intentions of one government are certainly not binding on its successors.

If the present attitude of the department is an aberration and it turns out that there is an aboriginal title, it does not follow that it must necessarily be extinguished by land grants or medicine chests or beads.

The nature of the compensation obviously is a matter for negotiation. Unilateral decision by government will merely convince the Eskimos that they are the victims of a swindle. It remains to be demonstrated that this is not the case.

Seek out causes

The formation of a multitude of organizations to fight pollution, war, poverty, inflation, etc., while ignoring the cause of these ills can be likened to swatting flies while leaving the breeding grounds that spawn them intact. In order to effect a satisfactory solution to these problems a critical look into the social economic relations of man must first be undertaken to find cause in order to find the cure.

The cause of these evils is capitalism, an artificial economic system that dictates profits must come before man's needs. The cure, socialism, production geared to meet man's needs, not for profit. —Wm. H. Johnson, Sidney.

Dictatorships and money

I would refer to the letter by your correspondent Francis Wilcox on the subject of "Soviet Priorities."

Your correspondent states that Russia was a country of poor peasants but she failed to state that there was a very tiny minority of very wealthy people who wielded all the power in Russia and in this was actively supported by the Russian Orthodox Church.

I had a very close friend, who was in the British Embassy from 1914 to the date of the Revolution and although this friend later became a Conservative Member of the London Parliament and a minor member of the Baldwin Government, he told me of the horrors of Russia under the Tzarist regime when only some 3 per cent of the population could read and write and, in fact, the large majority of the population lived in servitude. He also told me of the corruption, drunkenness and immorality of the so-called ruling clique and he added that although he was in his own country a staunch Conservative, he would have been a Bolshevik if he had been a Russian at that time.

Of course Russia is a dictatorship and I have known the horrors of dictatorships as I have lived under two.

But why is a dictatorship of the left in the interests of the masses evil when a dictatorship of the right in the interests of the few is acceptable and gains support of the Western democracies? In my view there is only one answer — money. —M. P. B. Wixson, 1254 Rockland.

Flock of starlings

The suggestion in your article "Route through Park Considered" must have brought consternation to all lovers of Victoria.

The opening paragraph to the effect that "traffic engineers" are considering splitting Beacon Hill Park is perhaps unfortunately worded, but it is an indication of where the decision in such matters is allowed to rest owing to the supine attitude of the numerous elected bodies which are supposed to protect the taxpayers interests.

DENNIS THE MENACE

Looking Back

From the Times of August 4, 1910:

Local immigration officers and employment agencies report a serious shortage of labor in the West, especially in those districts where harvesting has started. If scarcity is not speedily mitigated by excursions, of which there is no sign, considerable loss will undoubtedly occur to farmers. Complaints are not from farmers alone as railway contractors are unable to secure the men they require.

The traffic problem which may arise in five years time cannot be solved by turning Victoria into a network of freeways and high-rise apartments; what must be done is to start reducing the flow of unnecessary traffic. In this particular case, the problem is one which should and could be solved by the Provincial Government, as the temporary congestion is mainly caused by the hundreds of (usually one-man) vehicles which alight like a flock of starlings in the mornings on the dozens of parking lots in the parliamentary precincts, and take off simultaneously in the evenings.

To suggest that the city should spend millions of the taxpayers' money and wreck the "environment" on what would be at best a temporary palliative, if the increase in traffic is allowed to continue, is little short of criminal; nor is it correct to attribute the problem to "increased traffic from high-rise development." —N.T. Porter, 245 Linden.

Queen on stamps

In your issue of August 1 you have published the results of a gallop poll relative to the picture of Her Majesty the Queen on our Canadian stamps.

I beg to submit that the poll, undertaken by the Canadian Institute of Public Opinion, is an inadequate opinion. Thousands of Canadians have not been given an opportunity to state their views, and thousands will entirely disapprove of the removal of the Queen's head from some of our stamps.

It is educationally good to have a variety in design, such as the recent one of Sir Alexander McKenzie and previous ones of Canadian birds, but to completely eradicate the picture of the Queen is a denial of our historical background. —"Native Canadian".

Penalized Again

Does the public realize that we are being penalized yet again?

On July 17 an order-in-council was passed halving the annual ceiling for physiotherapy and other para-medical treatments under the B.C. Medical Plan. Some physiotherapists' patients have already had their full quota of treatments under the old clause, but those who may need treatment for the rest of this year will only be allowed under the plan half the time others have already had. Is this fair? Why is this order-in-council necessary in the middle of the year when Parliament is not in session?

The new clause is particularly hard on families. Whereas before, each member of a family was entitled to a ceiling of $50 per year of treatments, now under the new clause the ceiling for the whole family, whatever its size, is $50.

This seems to be a breach of contract, as we all pay an annual premium on the understanding that all medical services included in the plan should be honored as provided for, at least until the end of the year.

The coverage of $50 per person for physiotherapy as provided under the old clause was considered by medical doctors to be inadequate. Now, for single people the inadequacy will be doubled and the treatments halved — and for families the situation will be a lot worse. —J.W.

HIROSHIMA: 'Someday We Would Like to Forget'

By SELIG S. HARRISON

HIROSHIMA—"We would like to be left alone," said the young Japanese businessman intensely. "Outside people are always coming, and there is too much politics. Somehow, someday, we in Hiroshima would like to forget."

Kunihiko Iimura, now 30, celebrated his sixth birthday on Aug. 6, 1945, the day a much-remembered B-29 called the "Enola Gay" took off from the Marianas and dropped the first atomic bomb. The whole Iimura family had gone off to mark the occasion at the home of relatives 70 miles away.

They came back for a brief, horrified look six days later and very nearly decided never to return again. Finally reappearing more than a month after the event, they joined thousands of other survivors who established new homes and new neighborhoods on the ruins of the old.

The Iimura house stands today on the same ancestral plot in the centre of the city where it did before the war. Just across the Ota River stands the "peace dome," a shattered skeleton of what was once the city's industrial exhibition hall.

The dome is the new Hiroshima's only visible reminder of the A-bomb, and a continuing controversy flares over whether it really belongs, this strange little enclave of devastation in the midst of glistening new office buildings, humming traffic and the stream of gaily dressed, laughing youth.

While we talked on the plane ride here from Tokyo, Iimura, owner of a small plastics factory, suddenly sketched the dome on a scratch pad and handed the page over with an embarrassed smile. Personally, he confessed, he would like it to remain, since "it would be strange for us to pretend that we were just like any other city. I suppose I can never really forget, can I?"

"We were all exposed to radiation, you know, when my family came back on the sixth day. We are all afraid that something will happen to us, cancer or who knows what. We haven't registered, though, because we don't want all that attention. We want to lead a normal life. This is all mixed up in politics now."

Twenty-five years after the bomb, Hiroshima is still deeply preoccupied with its trauma despite all of its glistening buildings, and throughout the country memories of Aug. 6 still generate powerful emotional undercurrents in Japanese life.

At least three separate memorial meetings will be held in each major city when Hiroshima and the rest of Japan hold their anniversary observances Thursday. Socialists and Communists have held rival rallies annually since a clash in 1963 over Soviet nuclear testing. Both find the bomb their most reliable rallying symbol among the older generation of the party faithful and are reluctant to share it.

Hiroshima has its own city observance every year near the peace dome, but significantly, this is not a government-sanctioned counter to the opposition rallies and has never been attended by a Japanese prime minister.

Twenty-Five Years After Bomb Emotional Currents Strong

The persistent sensitivity of Aug. 6 is demonstrated in the fact that the governing Liberal Democratic Party clearly fears its potential as a weapon in the hands of the ultra-nationalist right as well as the left. In past years, the ruling conservatives have soft-pedalled the bomb to avoid playing into the hands of socialist and communist propagandists, who use it to mobilize sentiment against the Japan-U.S. security treaty. Now party leaders are also alarmed at hints of anti-American manipulation of the issue by Okinori Kaya, leader of far-right LDP elements.

Kaya and a committee of the Second World War Japanese generals launched a campaign on "National Foundation Day" in February to change the inscription that reads "the error shall not be repeated."

In Japanese, however, the sentence is more ambiguous and could imply that an unspecified someone "will not repeat the error." Kaya demands to know whether it is Japan or the United States or the people of Hiroshima who are apologizing.

Hiroshima officials reply that Japanese are expected to pray at the cenotaph for Japan to renounce war while visitors from countries possessing nuclear weapons should pray for abandonment of the bomb by their governments.

Another bitter controversy still much discussed here came shortly before the opening of Expo '70 in March, when government officials quietly removed a dramatic A-bomb sequence in the Japanese municipal government pavilion and watered down the A-bomb portion of a historical tableau in the $17 million Japanese national pavilion.

Ridiculing the mild A-bomb sequence now shown in the national pavilion, a former Tokyo University president charged that Expo officials were guilty of "toying with history." The Expo association replied that Japan should not offend the sensibilities of foreign visitors, especially Americans.

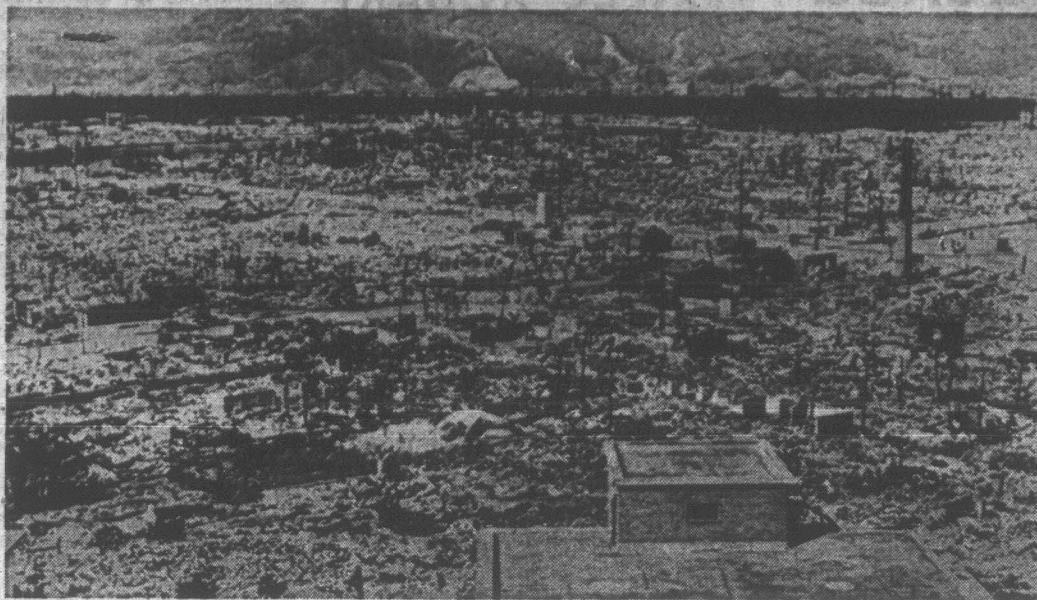

In the minds of many key officials, however, the desire to play down Hiroshima reflects a belief that Japan may need to make its own bomb some day and might as well begin getting over its "nuclear allergy" now.

By the same token, opposition leaders seek to keep Aug. 6 alive in the minds of the younger generation as a brake on a possible militarist revival. Anti-nuclear leaders were appalled when the respected public opinion analyst Yasumasa Tanaka disclosed last month that 58 per cent of the college students interviewed in a survey expected Japan to acquire nuclear weapons within five to 10 years.

For years, Japanese officials have discouraged efforts

CREW of Enola Gay is lost in crowd of servicemen that greeted plane on its return to Tinian in the Philippines after dropping bomb on Hiroshima.

Heart of a city wiped out in one ten-thousandth of a second by pacifist groups to obtain unexpurgated versions of U.S. and Japanese army films taken immediately after the bombing. When a Japanese documentary seized after the war was returned in 1967, the education ministry cut the worst scenes out before releasing the film, prompting a local housewives' campaign here and in Tokyo known as the "no cut movement."

The suppression policy finally collapsed this year following release of a documentary containing most of the cut portions by the Columbia University mass communications centre. Japanese TV networks have already shown the film to an estimated 60 million viewers, and another showing is scheduled Thursday. Hiroshima civic groups are also producing a special film depicting the struggles of the survivors, for use in the local 25th anniversary observance.

In Hiroshima, A-bomb consciousness cannot be a once-a-year thing, as it is in much of Japan, because so much of the city feels a direct connection with Aug. 6. More than 91,350 people are hibaksha (survivors) who directly experienced radiation or a bomb-related injury. Nearly everyone remembers the mushroom cloud, or knows someone who does. (Only 100,000 of the slightly less than 600,000 people in Hiroshima today are postwar newcomers).

An estimated 105 organizations in the city carry on activities related to the welfare of survivors, medical studies on radiation effects and historical research connected with the bomb. Hiroshima citizens are currently engaged in a monumental effort to reconstruct a precise map and census of the city as it existed before the bomb, block by block and house by house. Three thousand volunteers and eight full-time investigators are combing the city for information.

"We have no time to lose," says medical sociologist Kiyoshi Shimizu, who conceived the project, "because each year the old people are dying off and it becomes more and more difficult to double-check our facts." Some 940 painstakingly sketched neighborhood maps have been submitted by old settlers in response to radio and TV appeals.

One of the basic purposes of the map venture, says Shimizu, is to settle once and for all how many people were really killed by the bomb. Death estimates have ranged wildly from 64,000 to 240,000, and the mapmakers already have reason to suspect that the higher figures are closer to the truth. In the first 24-block area studied, for example, earlier records showed a total of 908 residents. The reconstruction has uncovered definite evidence that 1,306 people lived in the area and that 878 of them died on August 6 alone.

For the historians, Shimizu declares, his new evidence on casualties may well hold the most enduring interest, but for many Hiroshima oldsters the project has "an almost spiritual character. They feel that what they are doing will calm the dead souls and help to restore their links with their ancestors."

"This is a source of very deep satisfaction for all of us still living who knew the old Hiroshima. We want so much to re-establish a sense of the old order of things in some form. We Japanese attach great importance to order and to a certain pattern of relationships in our families and our social life. It is perhaps difficult for foreigners to understand why it means so much."

Perhaps the strongest organized force consciously seeking to keep memories of the bomb alive in Hiroshima today is the regional school teachers union, a tightly-knit, spirited group with chapters reaching into more than 200 schools.

The union leaped angrily into action in early 1969 after a survey revealed that 10 per cent of 600 students in five Hiroshima high schools did not know the U.S. had dropped the bomb. Another 10 per cent gave frivolous answers, with several swearing that nuclear weapons are "kakkoi" (groovy).

One teachers' committee compiled a special textbook for high school students on "Hiroshima" to supplement a cautious, government-approved history text, and another group prepared an additional, 64-page book for junior high schools. In the year since its publication, "Hiroshima" has sold more than 25,000 copies in area schools.

A guidebook for teachers issued with the book declares that "it would be unforgivable for us to neglect our duty to teach the next generation precisely and objectively what happened in Hiroshima." The Asahi Shimbun newspaper chain praised the textbook as "commendable at a time when national educational policies are so blatantly attempting to push aside this most disastrous tragedy in the history of mankind from the minds of future generations."

Student apathy concerning the Hiroshima legacy is not limited to high schools but is found to a lesser extent even among undergraduates majoring in political science and economics at Hiroshima University.

To get some sense of the collegiate mood here, I wandered for most of the morning on the Hiroshima campus with my Japanese interpreter and alter ego, Seijii Yamamoto. We made a point of spending relatively little time with committed student activists, whose views were important but predictable. Instead we lingered in the student lounge, chatting at length with some of the more serious-looking silent majority types.

After several false starts, a rather suspicious group of five bright undergraduates sprawled on two adjacent sofas with their books slowly began to warm up to our questions and eventually joined us for two hours of eager conversation over lunch.

Only one of them, soft-spoken Takao Oshita, whose uncle had been killed in the blast, talked of the bomb and of the need to curb nuclear weapons with the passion found among the older Hiroshima generation.

Osita suggested that the low-key A-bomb museum in the city should be "strengthened." The photo montages showing charred corpses slip past before their full impact sinks in, he felt, and most of the exhibits are far too statistical, emphasizing material damage rather than human suffering. All of the students felt the dome should

Most of them lost their families, and all of them live in constant fear of cancer or leukemia. Often they have a sense of guilt that they were the ones spared."

In the early weeks after the bomb, Dr. Shigeto recalls, countless survivors who escaped burns or blast injuries experienced nausea, diarrhea, purple skin splotches, loss of hair and sudden spasms of bleeding in the gums, nose, throat and rectum. Symptoms of this sort left a sense of nameless terror in the city, a gnawing conviction that radiation imparts some unfathomable "A-bomb disease" which may rise up at any time.

Dr. Shigeto's hospital has treated a grand total of 54,000 Hibaksha, most of whom have come back for examinations seven or eight times, and he firmly believes that radiation does explain many otherwise occult cases of extreme fatigue and premature aging. He politely differs from some American researchers at the U.S.-supported Atomic Bomb Casualty Commission here, who confine their work to established diseases and often dismiss complaints of fatigue as "atomic hypochondria."

In the early years, the Japanese press charged that the ABCC deliberately played down radiation effects. Today many Japanese continue to complain that it is inherently "unfair" for the victor in a war to make "guinea pigs" out of the vanquished.

Yale ecologist George Darling, director of the ABCC since 1957, vigorously defends its work as a "gift" to the people of Hiroshima, since ABCC findings lift the clouds of anxiety for many Hibaksha by determining precisely what degree of radiation exposure is required to bring predictable medical consequences.

While Dr. Shigeto focuses on the dark side of clinical findings to keep up popular pressures for government benefits to Hibaksha, Darling speaks cautiously of ABCC research findings and avoids apocalyptic judgments on the impact of radiation.

He cites well-known studies showing an abnormally high incidence of leukemia among Hibaksha, especially prior to 1951, and a relatively clear linkage between radiation exposure and thyroid cancer.

The most recent ABCC findings cited by Darling show that among those who were less than ten years old at the time of the bomb and who received radiation doses of more than 10 units, seven or eight types of cancer "have begun to occur at a rate far higher than would be expected in a group still so young."

What this portends will only be guesswork in the eyes of scientists, however, until the entire population sample of survivors under study has passed through the age when cancers would normally develop, and this means setting up the funds and personnel for an ABCC program extending into the 1990's.

Even more ominous, the possibility of genetic mutations resulting from radiation damage has been strongly suggested in recent studies by ABCC researcher Arthur Bloom showing "complex chromosomal aberrations" among 39 per cent of a group of survivors who were in their mothers' womb at the time of the bomb, in contrast to a four per cent result among a comparable group who were not exposed.

"Does this mean anything?" Darling asks. "Will their children be different? It does surely suggest that we ought to follow this sample and still larger samples to see what it does mean. This is not like studying generations of mice. Steadfastness of purpose over long periods of time never before contemplated is demanded of us. But we have opened a new drawer, and we can't just go away and leave it."

He was born and educated in Saskatchewan, receiving his master of science degree in agricultural engineering and economics from the University of Saskatchewan in 1948. He graduated with a certificate in business administration from the same university in 1954.

Since 1949, he has held the positions of head of the operations division of the agriculture department's conservation and development branch, director of agricultural machinery administration and manager of mobile equipment for the provincial power corporation, all with the Saskatchewan government.

He was appointed to his present position in 1966.

Kyle's administrative experience and his expertise in helping to translate the requirements of users into functional building design would be of great value to the university, Dr. Partridge said.

KITCHENER (CP) — Burglars forgot to wear their Hush Puppies Sunday when they attempted to break into the home of Charles Greb.

The burglars made enough noise to disturb Velvet, the droopy-eared bassett hound that became famous through Hush Puppies shoe advertisements. Velvet and another bassett, Jasmine, did enough barking to scare the burglars off the roof.

Mr. Greb is executive vice-president of Greb Industries Ltd. which manufactures Hush Puppies shoes.

'MAGIC GARDEN' LOSES APPEAL

B.C.'s censorship appeal board has upheld a decision by B.C. censor of motion pictures R. W. McDonald to ban The Magic Garden Of Stanley Sweetheart.

McDonald said Monday he decided to ban the movie because of its extreme position on drugs, sex, language and violence.

An MGM release, the movie is a surreal portrait of a college-age man searching for his identity. MGM appealed, but the three-member appeal board appointed by the cabinet upheld his decision.

McDonald said the movie exceeded his normal criteria for a "restricted" film.

"I can't cram everything into that category without destroying its image in the public's mind," he said.

McDonald said he has reviewed and passed several movies which he says were part of a trend toward "extreme frankness" in the industry.

Examples are I Am Curious, Yellow, and Beyond The Valley Of The Dolls.

Members of the appeal board are former Vancouver mayor Bill Rathie, school trustee Mrs. Constance Spring and Vancouver alderman Ed Sweeney.

McDonald said he has asked the attorney-general's department to create a new category for films like The Magic Garden Of Stanley Sweetheart, but the department does not think this is necessary.

One movie which is restricted in other provinces, but not here, is Woodstock. McDonald said the movie is unrestricted for two reasons.

It is, first of all, he said, a film taken from life. And were it restricted, he said, it would be unseen by the audience most interested in attending the film.

Woodstock is named after the now-famous rock festival in the United States which attracted more than 500,000 persons. Many young people say the event is a sign of the kind of communal society they hope to create.

McDonald said he has given a notice to parents that some nudity is shown in the film.

"But it's basically a film for youngsters," he said.

Nerve Gas 'Leaked'

WASHINGTON (CP) — The U.S. Army has disclosed that some of its obsolete rockets containing deadly nerve gas leaked before they were enclosed in steel-and-concrete jackets 18 months ago.

Now the army wants to dump 15,540 rockets into the Atlantic by mid-August because it says it would be increasingly dangerous to wait any longer.

Army Undersecretary Theodore R. Beal told Congress Monday: "We know of no way to detoxify these encased munitions safely on land."

Beal said any damage to marine life would be minimal and preferable to endangering human life ashore. "The maximum adverse environmental impact would be temporary contamination of approximately one cubic mile of water," he said.

Brig. Gen. William Stone testified before the House of Representatives subcommittee on oceanography that the rockets were placed in steel-and-concrete coffins originally because there was evidence of deterioration and leakage.

At the defense department, an army spokesman said the leakage was discovered about 18 months ago but the nerve gas did not escape the glass-fibre shipping containers in which the rockets were stored at the time.

He said he did not know how many of the rockets were defective, or whether any of them are in the batch the army wants to dump at sea, now stored at depots in Anniston, Ala., and Lexington, Ky.

While saying that the rockets must be disposed of soon because of their deteriorating condition, the army insisted that the rockets are virtually safe from accidental detonation.

"We do not wish to take the responsibility of doing that," Beal replied. "Our plan is to proceed."

Tests were carried out with rockets containing no nerve gas, he said.

The army set off a 50-pound dynamite charge under one and fired armor-piercing bullets into another.

Neither test set off any test rockets which contained live explosives, he said.

Frustrated Driver Poorer But Wiser

Poorer but wiser today is being followed by the accused Douglas Tees of Fisherman's Wharf.

Tees was fined $50 Monday in court by Judge William Ostler when he pleaded guilty to assaulting Thomas Mathews.

Court was told the accused tried to pass Mathews' car while driving on Quadra Street July 16 and became annoyed when he was unable to because of the traffic.

STILL FOLLOWED

He followed Mathews until he stopped his vehicle at which time he left his car, went to the other vehicle and reached through the window to punch the 51-year-old Mathews in the face and head.

Noticing that he still was "Driving in traffic is constant frustration," Ostler said, pointing out the alleged cut-off manoeuvre by Mathews may have been done inadvertently.

The judge asked Tees if he could imagine the "absolute chaos" if everybody chased and punched those they felt drove badly.

Police Court

A 21-year-old Williams Lake woman was fined $400 Monday in court by Judge William Ostler when she pleaded guilty to shoplifting.

Lorraine Tattersall was apprehended in the Bay Aug. 1 about 2:20 p.m. when she tried to leave the store with merchandise she hadn't paid for.

She had several items, totalling $3.72, in her possession at the time of her arrest and admitted taking them from the store.

Einar Eric Sorlin, 24, of Seattle, Wash., was fined a total of $275 for possession of marijuana and possession of hashish.

The two items were seized from Sorlin by customs officials at the Black Ball Ferry Dock July 30.

Judge J. A. Byers fined the accused $250 for the hashish offence and $25 on the marijuana charge.

John D. MacCormac, 25, of 2848 Doncaster, was fined $350 Friday for impaired driving.

Court was told the accused was stopped at Douglas and Johnson by city police after being observed driving erratically in the area about 4:45 a.m. Friday.

He had a breathalyzer reading of 24 per cent blood-alcohol content at the time.

Byers also recommended that his licence be suspended for four months.

SOME FARES DOWN

Air Canada Ups Prices

MONTREAL (CP)—Airline passengers will have to pay higher fares on the more popular domestic routes starting Wednesday but will get a break of reduced fares on less travelled routes and holiday excursions, airline spokesmen say.

An Air Canada spokesman said his company applied to the air transport committee of the Canadian transport commission for increases on 150 routes and decreases on 410, leaving 27 unchanged.

A CP Air spokesman said he did not know the exact number of changes but rates on the same routes that Air Canada has will be the same.

The Air Canada spokesman said the increases apply to "the more heavily travelled routes" and another company spokesman said the decreases apply to routes "that nobody uses."

The economy one-way Toronto-Vancouver fare will increase $8 to $128 from $120 and return will be double, Air Canada said.

But new 14- to 28-day excursion fares for vacationers will reduce the return cost to $192, an almost 25-per-cent reduction.

The decreases apply to routes such as Toronto-Sault Ste. Marie, down $1 to $27 from $28, Ottawa-Windsor, down $5 to $34 from $39 and Quebec-Toronto, down $4 to $36 from $40.

Various discounts that have been available will be less of a bargain.

DISCOUNTS LOWERED

Discounts for youths and people over 65 will be lowered to 40 per cent from the previous 50 per cent of the economy fare.

Children between 12 and 21 flying with their parents will pay two-thirds instead of the previous one-half fare. Those under 12 will pay one-half instead of one-third fare.

There will also be a $5 surcharge for stopovers lasting more than four hours.

The Air Canada spokesman said the new rates, based on a

Edmonton Firm Plans To Market Soviet Jet

CALGARY (CP) — A Russian-built aircraft could be on the Canadian market within four months if everything goes smoothly for the plane's importers, International Jet Air Ltd.

Fred Woodhall, engineering and maintenance director of Jet Air, said certification from the department of transport is all that is needed before the Yak-40 tri-jet is cleared for sale.

The short-takeoff-and-landing aircraft would be suitable for use as a third-level carrier serving small centres, an airbus or an executive jet, Woodhall said.

It seats between 24 and 33 passengers, depending on the amount of space allotted for baggage and freight, and can operate on grass, gravel or partially-prepared runways as short as 3,500 feet.

Before the aircraft is certified, it will undergo four months of extensive testing by the transport department.

This does not mean the craft is inferior in any way, Woodhall said, but is needed because Soviet aircraft regulations do not agree on all points with western standards, although they may be just as comprehensive.

The plane will make its Canadian debut Friday at the Abbotsford air show in British Columbia, then continue on a demonstration tour of major Canadian cities, ending Aug. 29 in Toronto.

No western-built aircraft is comparable to the YAK-40, Mr. Woodhall said, and "this is the whole attraction of the piece of machinery."

The plane fills a need, we hope, that no other craft in the West does."

RECEIVED OFFERS

The selling price would be less than $1 million and Jet Air has already received a couple of "oblique offers" from interested companies.

$200M Bond Offer By Ottawa at 7.25%

OTTAWA (CP) — The federal government today offered investors a new medium-term bond paying 7.25 per cent interest that can be converted in 1975 into a higher-paying bond.

The new bonds, to be issued Aug. 15 at par prices, will be for a term of five years and four months. They will be exchangeable, at the option of the holder, into 10-year eight-per-cent bonds due Dec. 15, 1985.

Investors who buy the bonds now, convert them, and hold the longer-term bond to maturity will earn 7.63 per cent for the full 15 years and four months.

The government offered $200 million of the new bonds. The Bank of Canada will take at least $50 million, leaving up to $150 million for sale to the public. The money raised in the bond issue will be for general government purposes.

The original 7.25-per-cent bonds will be due Dec. 15, 1975.

Pan Ocean Oil In Pact With United Bata

NEW YORK (CP) — Pan Ocean Oil Corp. has announced in order that the government can determine how many of them will be converted or have to be redeemed on that date, the exchange option will be open only for the six months between Dec. 15, 1974, and June 14, 1975.

The last time AMC paid a dividend was in September, 1965. Its fiscal year runs from Oct. 1 through Sept. 30.

Net sales during the third quarter reached $303.3 million compared with $193.9 million during the comparable quarter of 1969. However, the 1970 sales included figures from Jeep Corp., which was acquired from Kaiser Industries after the third quarter of 1969.

During the third quarter of 1969, the firm reported a net profit of $2.6 million.

Chairman Roy D. Chapin Jr., and President William V. Lumburg attributed at least 60 per cent of the third-quarter loss to lingering effects of a five-week strike which crippled production last fall.

Under the terms of the agreement, Pan Ocean would become a principle shareholder in United Bata with about 34 per cent of the outstanding voting stock if Pan Ocean's options were exercised.

TO NAME DIRECTORS

Pan Ocean will nominate half of the board of directors of United Bata.

United Bata now has 8,481,460 shares of common stock outstanding. A shareholders meeting will be called to approve an increase in authorized shares necessary for completion of this transaction.

United Bata, which has headquarters in Calgary, is an exploration company which holds a large interest in the Strachan Field in southwestern Alberta. Common stock is traded on the Toronto and Vancouver exchanges.

Boeing Jet To Deliver Wire Plant

VANCOUVER (CP) — An Air France Boeing 707 is scheduled to land at Vancouver International Airport Wednesday with a 40-ton wire-drawing plant made in England for a Canadian manufacturer who ordered it from an American sales agent.

The freight by air will speed up the assault by the Canadian manufacturer on the world market with an expanded line of wire products.

"To our knowledge, this will be the largest drawing machine in service in North America, as measured by the number of stages and horsepower per stage," said Abraham J. Sacks, president of Tree Island Steel Co. Ltd. of Richmond, buyers of the $250,000 machine.

Air France western district manager H. D. McGregor said the freighting was the first Air France Canadian charter west of Ontario and the largest single load of equipment for a plant moved to Vancouver on one aircraft.

Sacks said Tree Island would gain about three months of production time.

"The machine will enable us to reach out to very distant markets."

He said the new machine can save about one-third the labor on material handling, improving Tree Island's competitive advantage in marketing products as varied as paper clips and strapping wire for forest products.

Air France got the freighting job because a Boeing 707 is 90 inches high inside and can accommodate the largest piece of the wire machine with six inches clearance. An Air Canada DC-8 cargo hatch is 1½ inches lower than the height of the machine.

Inco

International Nickel Co. of Canada Ltd. reports profits of $102.4 million or $1.37 a share for the first six months of this year, compared with $80.58 million or $1.08 a share in the same period last year. All figures are in U.S. terms.

Sales totalled $540.77 million compared with $427.6 million.

Henry S. Wingate, chairman, said the company plans to raise $75 million in Canadian debenture to help finance Inco's $1.1 billion Canadian expansion and modernization program.

BILL WALKER

This is the mid-summer sandwich diet for those on short rations, or, if you want the football selections from the top, there is a new man on the totem pole who may know something about the game, but don't bet too much on it.

Jackson, who once played football for the Ottawa Rough Riders, a team of note as well, has joined the club. He has decided to try and become an expert in addition to being its best player.

Now Jackson undoubtedly had few peers in his life as a quarterback. On that theme there can be no dispute. But as a football prognosticator, he is only serving his apprenticeship, and must be treated as the rookie he is.

Besides, he is due for a shock if he thinks he is going to be an instant success.

Nobody has ever made it big in his first season of picking winners. It takes years of practice and Jackson should know that.

For instance, on Saturday in Weekend Magazine, a Imagine that!

But although he is doomed to failure, he still is a likeable lad, probably deserves the chance, and can always use the money.

However, for the real conclusion of interest in the CFL race, stay tuned. It will all be revealed here tomorrow.

(The Mets won the world series, didn't they?)

And now from here and there ... and in baseball some players have taken to wearing inner soles to protect them from the added heat when playing on synthetic turf ... some estimates put the temperature 35 degrees higher

There was the note, too, that may have passed unnoticed. Milwaukee's attendance in the American League as a substitute city for Seattle has been no great surprise ... A short while ago, it was less than Seattle's at the same time last year. Seattle lost its major league baseball team because the fans weren't coming to an old ball park with poor facilities, and so the city went to a new "old" home, and has fared little better ... However, it's doubtful if Seattle would have measured up, either, the economy being what it is ... And now the rumor mills are grinding out the story once again that the Dallas-Fort Worth area will be a new home for a major league team because the likely candidate, Dallas, it will be recalled, tried to muscle in on the Seattle situation this spring ... And it was nice, too, to see Clancy Loranger of the Province, back in business. He's got that cigar going again, too, which completes the picture ...

And here's Montreal's Jean Beliveau on his old teammate, Gump Worsley:

"We were certainly sorry to see Gump go, because in those important games we knew he would be coming up with a great game."

And Beliveau on Gordie Howe, one arm and all:

"He'll have more than one good game in six," (which is what Howe wryly predicted here). "He's in a class by himself."

And so, until tomorrow. That's when everyone will learn what is really going to happen in the Canadian Football League. Remember, you read it here first that the Lions were going to finish third last year. They did.

Busy Schedule Takes Its Toll On Net Threat

TORONTO (CP) — Jim Boyce says he should have concentrated on one tennis tournament at a time.

The Toronto player, with Inge Weber of Toronto, won singles titles at the western Ontario open at Waterloo. Then both came to Toronto to lose in the Canadian closed championships. Miss Weber, seeded eighth in the Canadian, was the lone seeded player to be ousted in the first round Monday. She had played in Waterloo Sunday.

Boyce had a hectic Monday. The Canadian junior champion of the last two years played the semi-final and final at Waterloo, then snoozed in the back seat of a friends' car on the trip to Toronto.

He was beaten 8-6, 6-1 by Rejean Legende of Montreal.

"I didn't feel too bad at first," he said. "But all of a sudden I lost everything."

Miss Weber was worn down by a clubmate, Della Lubin, 6-3, 5-6.

Harry Faquier of Toronto, only seeded player in the men's singles to get to a third set, ground out a 5-7, 6-3, 6-1 victory over Bill MacDonell of Vancouver.

All seeded women advanced with the exception of Miss Weber.

Jane O'Hara of Toronto and Susan Butt of Vancouver went ahead by defaults. No. 1 seed Andrea Martin of Montreal won 6-1 over Joanne Bergstrom of Vancouver but highly-regarded Susan Eager of Vancouver had a more difficult time knocking off Rosemary Jull of Ottawa 6-4, 6-3.

Lions Rushing Whisler To Work Against 'Peg

WINNIPEG (CP) — Defensive end Bill Whisler returns here tonight, via Toronto and Vancouver, to play with British Columbia Lions against the team, received when he dropped by to pass the time of night: "When do YOU play your first game, Bud?" a carping critic cracked ...

Whisler, a six-foot three, 240-pound all-star traded by Winnipeg Blue Bombers of the Western Football Conference to Toronto last month, has found his way to the Lions after being cut by the Eastern Conference Argonauts.

The Lions head coach Jackie Parker, who arrived here with his charges Monday night, says Whisler, despite having only four workouts with the team, will be his starting defensive end in tonight's game.

"I don't care what problems he had in Winnipeg and Toronto," Parker said of the nine-year Canadian Football League veteran. "He is a good defensive end and deserves to play in this league."

The game, which matches two teams that took sound troun-nings in their season openers last week, gets under way at 6 p.m. PDT, broadcast on the CTV western network (Channel 8 in Victoria).

The Lions were crushed 42-9 by Saskatchewan Roughriders in their first game, while the Bombers collapsed in the second half and fell 34-10 to Calgary Stampeders, after leading 10-1 at half-time.

The Bombers' misfortunes against Calgary coincided with the departure with a damaged knee of their all-star middle linebacker, Phil Minnick.

CHANGES NECESSARY

Minnick, injured on the first play from scrimmage in the second half, will miss the B.C. game. His absence has forced Bomber coach Jim Spavital to do some fine-up juggling.

He is expected to insert either tight end Ed Breding, who is on the limp, or second-year man Rob McLaren into Minnick's spot. If Breding gets the call, Canadian Lance Fletcher, obtained in a trade with Saskatchewan, is expected to take over tight end.

Parker, who has a stream of players going on and off the injured list, will also present a different line-up than the one outclassed by Saskatchewan.

Main addition along with Whisler will be fullback Jim Evanson, who had an appendectomy July 3 and was absent from practice last week although the club's doctor insisted he was fit to play.

Safety Dave Easly, the 1969 Rookie of the Year, returns to the Lions' defensive backfield after being on the injured list.

E. Greenard Poles, cut earlier by the Lions, will take over a linebacking job from Dave Tobey, who played against Saskatchewan but now is injured.

Newly-acquired Mack Lamb will join regulars Rich Robinson, Jerry Bradley and former Blue Bomber Ernie Pitts to round out the defensive umbrella.

The players' pension fund, the amount the owners had offered at the start of the dispute, plus $250,000 a year in disability, widow, maternity and dental benefits—the owners' apparent compromise since their previous offer.

General manager Jim Finks said he has not talked with Kapp's attorney because of the strike and lockout of Vikings' veterans from the training camp since July 24. The general manager has denied that the former Canadian Football League player is asking for franchises reached the half-way point.

B.C. blanked Alberta 4-1 Monday after tying Manitoba 1-1 on Sunday.

Gary Thompson led B.C. to victory with three goals while John Haar added one.

Quebec leads the eastern pool with two victories.

Winners of the two pools clash Thursday for the national title.

B.C. BOOTERS TAKE LEAD IN TOURNEY

WINNIPEG — British Columbia advanced into the lead of the western pool Monday as the round-robin interprovincial soccer championships reached the half-way point.

And Finks did not reveal if any immediate negotiations were scheduled with Kapp's agent in Nevada. Kapp, meantime, was reported on the West Coast and not expected to return to camp at 6 p.m. today when other veterans would report.

Kapp, who played with Calgary Stampeders and British Columbia Lions of the CFL, is one of 18 veterans who have not signed new contracts, but the quarterback played out his option last season and became a free agent May 1.

ROZELLE DOES IT The most serious labor dispute in the history of American professional sports—which even unprecedent federal mediation failed to resolve—ended Monday following a marathon 22-hour session involving executives of all 26 clubs and the entire seven-man players' committee.

Quarterbacking the action at the league's office was commissioner Pete Rozelle, who finally stepped out of his role as a supposedly neutral observer. He brought both sides together and kept them there until they reached agreement.

Mickey Finn Creator Dies

MIAMI (AP) — Cartoonist Frank E. (Lank) Leonard, creator of the Mickey Finn comic strip and Sheriff Phil Finn who made detective work look easy, died Sunday after a long illness. He was 74.

Leonard began his career as a sports cartoonist with the New York Sun and numbered baseball greats Babe Ruth and Lou Gehrig among his closest friends—and best cartoon subjects.

Morris Weiss, a Leonard associate, joined the cartoonist one month after the Mickey Finn strip began in 1936. Weiss said Monday he will continue to do most of the drawing and writing for the strip, carried by 200 newspapers in the United States and Canada.

SHAW FESTIVAL OPENER

Song, Parody and Pun in Stratford Satire

By VICTOR STANTON to enjoy Bennett's Forty Years NIAGARA-ON-THE-LAKE On, but it is by no means necessary. (CP) — It helps to be English as the Shaw Festival production—or at least familiar with—of the play demonstrates English history and literature—stated Monday night.

The production, which opened a five-week run before a capacity audience of nearly 400, emphasizes all the entertainment aspects of song, parody and pun.

The playwright, author and star of the hit revue Beyond The Fringe, uses the play-within-a-play format to present a series of more-or-less related sketches that satirize much of English institutional life and many of the country's prominent cultural and political figures of the first four decades of this century.

At times the comedy gets bogged down in nostalgia, and on occasion the puns are juvenile.

The greatest praise for the success of this North American premiere of Forty Years On must go to director Paxton Whitehead, who also took top honors among the performers for his characterizations in the Oscar Wilde and confirmation class scenes.

HELPED BY DESIGNER

Mr. Whitehead, the festival's art director since 1967, has been helped tremendously by set designer Maurice Strike.

The cast includes 17 boys, ranging in age from 12 to 18, the majority of them students of Ridley College, a private boys' school in nearby St. Catharines.

Herbert Whittaker of the Toronto Globe and Mail credits the boys with giving the production "its greatest sparkle."

Don Braid of the Kitchener-Waterloo Record says Mr. Whitehead "steals the show," while Tom James of the Buffalo Courier says his direction "keeps the play moving through occasional rough spots . . . and his presence on stage always manages to steal the spotlight."

Secrets for Beginner to Learn

By HILDA BEASTALL

In a newly established garden many things occur to set a beginning gardener wondering. He may wonder why the waterlilies did not bloom. The pool was sited and built with loving care in a tree-shaded corner where the flowers were to be talking pieces for visitors.

The plants grew to almost triple their size after being put in last year, but no blooms. Perhaps the disappointment can be lessened for next year.

Waterlilies must have sunlight before they will form buds. By carefully noting which portion of the pool gets the most sun after one o'clock, perhaps a judicious thinning of the tree branches will allow direct sun to shine on just that portion of the pool without exposing the whole sitting-out area to unbroken sunlight.

If the waterlily plants happen to be in another part of the pool they could be successfully moved to a sunnier portion during April next year, just when new growth begins.

Knowing that the plants must have sun on the leaves as they float on the water's surface may help the new gardener to notice one end of the pool which has sun nearly all day, even without cutting away any tree branches.

Hilda

Another cause for some wondering is when bulbs of true lilies (species and varieties of the genus Lilium) fail to even show a stem of leaves the first year after planting.

This is quite a common happening when lily bulbs are bought late in fall. The scales have become limp and the basal plate (where new roots should emerge) is quite dried and shrivelled.

If these bulbs were planted in a gravelly soil with some humus added, they still have a chance of making an appearance next year. Meantime a new underground system has to be built.

Sometimes in the following year, a mass of thin leaves may appear, indicating the scales of the original bulb have each formed roots and now instead of one large bulb there are many bulbils.

In time these will flower. Give two weak fertilizer feedings while leaves are green, and bulb fertilizer in fall. Then wait hopefully.

Lily bulbs differ from other bulbs in not having dry protective coverings like the daffodil and the tulip. Therefore the scales begin to lose moisture as they come from the soil. Dampened peat around them helps to retard the loss, but the air must be cool to prevent rotting.

The best way to avoid wondering why lily bulbs don't grow is to get them as soon as possible after being lifted from the grower's fields.

Crew of Ship Recalls Days of Service

TORONTO (CP) — More than 150 former crew members of HMCS Uganda met at a reunion here during the weekend and swapped sentimental reminiscences of their life aboard the Canadian cruiser which saw service in the Pacific Ocean during the Second World War.

Among those who attended was Admiral E. R. Mainguy and Admiral Hugh Pullen, who both served on the vessel after it was acquired from Britain in 1943.

During the war, Admiral Mainguy was the commanding officer of the 8,000-ton cruiser, which carried nine six-inch guns as main armament. Admiral Pullen at that time was a commander and served as executive officer.

The reunion was held Friday night, Saturday and Sunday at HMCS York, a naval establishment at Toronto.

Arthur Day, one of the organizers of the reunion who served on the vessel as a lieutenant from June, 1944 until August, 1945.

Premier Robarts said in a telegram to the reunion meeting: "I'm drydocked ... having a few barnacles scraped off my feet."

The Uganda's name after the war was changed to HMCS Quebec and she was decommissioned in the late 1950s.

KARPIN ON BRIDGE

Even at the expert level, slam bidding is, on occasion, a hit-or-miss proposition. Such was the case in the deal presented today. Sitting North and South, respectively, were two of the continent's most scientific bidders, Eric Murray and Sammy Kehela, both of Toronto, Canada. The hand arose in the Vanderbilt Cup Championships held earlier this year.

North South vulnerable. North deals.

Opening lead: Queen of ♠.

After South's third position opening bid of one heart, and West's one spade overall, Murray was at a loss as to what to bid. A response of two diamonds would not be forcing; and to leap to four hearts was not particularly appealing to him, since a slam might well abound in the North-South cards.

Whether he had a hunch, or whether he was endowed temporarily with E.S.P., I do not know. On his seven high-card points, he came out with a six heart bid.

East had no problem whatsoever: he promptly doubled on his two aces. After all, his partner had overcalled, and the latter figured to come up with a trick if East's ace of clubs had happened to be trumps.

The play presented no problem. Upon capturing the opening lead with the spade ace, Kehela led a low trump, the board's queen being taken by East's ace. A spade return was captured by South's king.

After the king of hearts had picked up East's seven spot, South led the queen of diamonds and finessed. When the queen won the trick, Kehela breathed a sigh of relief. It now became a routine matter to bring home the diamond suit without the loss of a trick. South's only loser was a trump at East's ace.

South had just the right cards needed to produce the slam. But suppose that South's spades and clubs had been interchanged:

Spades: king, 9, 8.
Hearts: king, 9, 8, 6.
Diamond: queen, 4.
Clubs: ace, king, 6, 5.

In this case, the opponents would have been able to cash two aces, and the slam would have gone down the drain. And so, "you pay your money and take your chances."

Budget Traveller Reaches Sweden

GERNSK OELDSVIK, Lapland (AP) — A 21-year-old Canadian, Mario Dagonetti of Vancouver, arrived in this northern Swedish township today on a beat-up motorbike and told a reporter how to tour Europe on 90 cents a day.

Dagonetti has been in 15 countries since he left Vancouver early this year and says he cut expenses by sleeping in the open.

Of course, in a downpour you have to look for a nice, waterproof bridge, he said.

"So what?" Jack grinned. "You give me two dimes instead, and I'll have three times as much as you."

How much did each have?

(Answer Wednesday)

Monday's Answer: LASS was 3699.

Courtenay Official Dismissed

COURTENAY — City council Monday dismissed city administrator William Moore following a report by the labor relations committee.

Moore was suspended by the mayor after the administrator was involved in an accident while driving a city-owned vehicle. He was not authorized to use the car.

In the report, the committee said it had investigated circumstances surrounding the accident and they are satisfied "there was good cause for the suspension and that the actions of the administrator have been such that he can no longer command the confidence of council in carrying out his duties."

OBJECTION

Ald. Harry Harris objected to the dismissal asking council to look at the man's accomplishments and the number of things he had done in comparison to the complaint.

"I would like to see him given another chance. A man with such service should be given one more chance."

Moore, on hearing of the decision, expressed disappointment on the way the matter was handled.

"The unprecedented amount of publicity stemming directly as it did from the mayor's press release (Mayor George Hobson) smacks of vindictiveness, a quality which has no place in public affairs."

"Why the long established policy of discussing employee matters in camera was abandoned in this instance, and my family put through this ordeal, is more than I can comprehend after more than 20 years of service to the city," Moore said.

Moore was MLA for Comox in 1952 and former mayor and alderman from 1957 to 1964.

Annie 7 Udderly Fantastic

DUNCAN — Two-year-old Holstein Annie 7 won the July feed prize from Cowichan Co-Operative Services for Cowichan dairy farmer L. M. Kasberger after producing 13,964 pounds of milk and 614 pounds of butterfat during one lactation period of 305 days.

J. W. Wikkerink of Duncan was given the Buckerfield's award when his four-year-old Holstein Jo Ann produced 17,511 pounds of milk and 704 pounds of butterfat in 296 days. G. A. Van Jaarsveld had the highest herd average of 1,568 pounds of milk and 85 pounds of butterfat based on a 30-day test.

Jack Woof, Cowichan Dairy Herd Improvement Association inspector, said there were 40 completed lactations consisting of 38 Holsteins, one Jersey and one crossbred.

He said 14 out of 22 mature animals qualified with more than 550 pounds of butterfat and, in the two-year-old class, 13 out of 18 qualified with more than 450 pounds of butterfat.

Third Charge Nets Jail Term

COURTENAY (CP) — Frank Alexander Trohan of Vancouver was sentenced to six months in jail Monday on an impaired driving charge. Court was told Trohan had two previous convictions on similar charges in Vancouver. Judge John Ryland also prohibited him from driving for two years.

Bolt Blasts Navy Plane To Ground

SEARCHLIGHT, Nev. (AP) — Ten U.S. Navy men died when, witnesses said, a bolt of lightning apparently shattered their anti-submarine patrol plane and sent it raining in fiery pieces onto a rocky ridge near here.

The P-3B patrol plane stationed at Barber's Point, Hawaii, was on a training flight Monday with its crew of three officers and seven men.

The plane was about 50 miles south of Las Vegas on a flight from Nellis Air Force Base near Las Vegas to the North Island Naval Air Station in San Diego when it entered an area of thunderstorm activity.

"I saw a flash of lightning in a black cloud and then saw this burning debris fall out of the clouds," said Harry Swan, a resident of this southern Nevada desert hamlet.

Sheriff's deputies said wreckage of the four-engined turboprop plane were spread over about a half mile of rugged ridge line.

DUNCAN — Daniel Wong, 17, of Duncan, was awarded a gift Monday from the Cowichan School Board for winning the Governor-General's bronze medal with a 98.5 per cent average in the 1970 grade 12 scholarship examinations.

His father, Poy Wong, in return, turned over a $100 cheque to the school board to show his appreciation of the educational opportunities his son has had.

Chairman David Haywood told the board that Daniel is from a family of six boys and that his two older brothers are currently attending the University of British Columbia.

Daniel, born in Duncan, attended Duncan Elementary, Quamichan Junior Secondary and Secondary and Cowichan Senior Secondary.

"Daniel wrote three exams," said Haywood. "That is more than the required amount. In chemistry he got 99 per cent, math 98 per cent and physics 98 per cent. He just missed the silver medal by one-half a point."

When Haywood presented the attaché case to the scholar he explained that the gift was a small token of their appreciation and congratulations.

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn. — A remarkable tiny hearing aid has been perfected by a man who has been hard of hearing for nearly ten years.

This small device has no dangling cords or separate transmitting units and represents a new, unusual design idea in a product to help hard of hearing.

It was developed especially for those persons who can hear but can't understand. This new hearing instrument provides "ear-level" hearing with the wearer picking up speech, sounds, television and radio at his ear. Due to the use of transistors, the user cost is extremely low.

A true life actual size replica of the smallest all-in-the-ear hearing aid ever made will be given absolutely free to anyone sending in this advertisement while supply lasts. So we suggest you write for yours now. No obligation whatsoever. Write to Anderson Hearing Electronics, 1320 Blandford St., Victoria.

College Forced To Get Loan

NANAIMO — Malaspina Regional College, through the Nanaimo School Board, has received special borrowing authority for $200,000 from the department of education.

It is to make up for financial assistance not received from the Cowichan School Board since it withdrew from the college scheme May 6.

College chairman Dr. Roy MacMillan said today that although they have a borrowing limit of $200,000 to date they have only borrowed $75,000.

"We had to borrow because Duncan has not met their commitments," he said.

Oliver Neaves, college burser, said Cowichan owes $118,700 for arrears outstanding from January to July, 1970.

"Nanaimo School Board borrows the money and then turns it over to us," he said.

NOTICE

Patricia Bay Highway

As a result of the present construction program the Patricia Bay Highway will be closed to vehicular traffic between Royal Oak Avenue and Falaise Crescent for several months, starting within two weeks. At about the same time direct access to the Patricia Bay from Royal Oak Avenue will also be closed and traffic redirected over a new service road lying east of the Patricia Bay Highway and connecting to Quadra Street. Pedestrian traffic between Royal Oak Avenue and the West Saanich Road will be maintained.

Northbound Glenford Avenue, Quadra Street and Patricia Bay Highway traffic will be diverted along the West Saanich Road to a new service road west of the Patricia Bay Highway which rejoins it at a point opposite the Royal Oak Burial Park. Southbound traffic will use the same route. Access will be maintained to the Royal Oak Burial Park and Falaise Crescent.

In the accompanying sketch plan the shaded sections represent the portions of the Patricia Bay Highway and Royal Oak Avenue to be closed and the dotted lines, the new service roads. These will be paved. Exact dates of the closure will be advertised shortly.

It is expected that most of the time the service roads will carry traffic without difficulty but it is possible some delays may occur during rush hours. Commuters and tourists, therefore, make allowances.

★ ★ ★*Thatcher Discusses Schreyer

VICTORIA BEACH, Man. (CP) — Saskatchewan Premier Ross Thatcher says other premiers have a "hard time" taking Manitoba Premier Ed Schreyer seriously because of his political philosophy.

Munching a barbecued beef sandwich at a shore lunch for the eight provincial premiers attending the annual premier's conference, Thatcher said the ideology of the Schreyer administration is inhibiting the conference.

"Let's face it, some of the premiers have a hard time taking him seriously," Thatcher said of his New Democratic Party neighbor.

The premiers met for one day aboard the vessel Lord Selkirk as it cruised Lake Winnipeg. Monday, they docked at the posh resort area of Victoria Beach on Lake Winnipeg and were feted at a beef barbecue featuring an Indian grass dance.

Thatcher said a general election in Manitoba, a distinct possibility since the NDP administration's automobile insurance bill hit a roadblock last week, would have "tremendous bearing" on the political situation in his own province.

"I can honestly say that a defeat of the Schreyer government would help us and a win could hurt us considerably," the Liberal premier said.

WEATHER SYNOPSIS

Showers and a few thunderstorms persisted through the night over the central interior of B.C. and layers of fog and low cloud moved back onto the outer coastline but elsewhere over the province skies were clear overnight. A similar weather pattern will exist today as was experienced on Monday except over the northern B.C. coast. An active Pacific storm moving slowly southward over the central Gulf of Alaska will spread rain to the Queen Charlotte this afternoon.

The Weather and You

By CARL RIBLET JR.

Jeff, the old Wyoming cowboy, got up on one of his horses yesterday for the first time since his second trip to the hospital. He rode into the yard and sat there grinning. The desert temperature was near 100, but it was very dry, of course. I brought a pail of water for the Arabian and Jeff said, "Wait a second. I hope that water isn't cold." It wasn't.

While Fatima drank, Jeff explained that cold water will make a horse sick and perhaps cause it to founder. Some people, he said, react in the same way. "Cold water doesn't bother me in hot weather," he said, "but in some people cold water can hit the stomach and cause a spasm that can make their heart beat faster and give them cramps."

Jeff said that he has known cowboys who would feel dizzy and sick if they drank cold water while they were working around outside the barns in the heat, and others who could drink it all day long and feel good. Everybody reacts differently to the weather.

Building Action Perks Up But Well Below 1969 Pace

Construction activity in Greater Victoria picked up slightly in July, but remained well down for the first seven months of this year.

Figures from Victoria, Saanich, Esquimalt, Oak Bay and Central Saanich show permits worth $27.6 million issued so far this year compared with $45.8 million in the corresponding period last year.

RETURN TO WORK

Figures for July were up due partly to the return to work by building workers July 27 after a three-month lockout.

No figures were available from North Saanich, Sidney, and Langford-Colwood-Metchosin.

In Victoria, the value of building permits issued during July was almost 50 per cent less than the value of those issued in the same month last year.

A total of 483 permits were issued last month for a value of $2,106,903. In July 1969, 526 permits were issued at a total value of $4,124,055.

This decline is also evident in the figures for the first seven months of each year.

Last year, 3,843 permits worth $22,341,877 had been issued at the end of July against 3,129 permits worth $13,719,906 issued in the first seven months of 1970.

In Saanich, two building permits worth $1.2 million—for senior citizens apartment at Hampton Park and townhouses on Larchwood—boosted the monthly total to $1.7 million, up from $1.3 million last year.

Compromise Plan

Saves Some Trees

Victoria council's traffic committee today endorsed a compromise plan to save some of the trees on Begbie Street.

Richard Morris, 1562 Vining, organizer of the campaign to save the trees, saw his alternate plan for Begbie defeated before a barrage of testimony from city staff.

And he was unsuccessful in attempting to obtain an official moratorium on Begbie road and land acquisition plans.

But the compromise will save all the trees on Begbie between Belmont and Stanley Streets and minimize encroachment on Stadacona Park.

Morris led a delegation of four this morning before the committee, and touched off a 90-minute debate.

He outlined 10 objections to the Johnson-Begbie-Shelburne scheme and proposed conversion of Fernwood Road into a two-lane one-way artery leading south into the city from Hillside.

Simmons said his department last week conducted a series of time studies for arrival of fire trucks to various parts of the city. His conclusion, he said, was that Fernwood must remain open to northbound traffic.

And Campbell followed his remarks by saying Fernwood was too far from Begbie to give an effective in-and-outbound, one-way traffic flow.

"There's really no alternative," he said.

This brought Ald. Peter Pollen into the debate. "I don't question the real brilliance in the plan," he said.

But Pollen then quoted a statement made by Campbell in February, 1970, which said the city was no closer to solving its traffic problems than it was in 1964.

Campbell said he would later ask for committee approval to conduct discussions with B.C. Hydro for revision of the six-year-old capital region transportation study.

"But a basic grid system (the J-B-S and Finlayson road projects) is necessary before regional transportation can exist," Campbell said.

Final approval of the J-B-S compromise is expected to come at the next meeting of city council Aug. 13.

with trying to optimize parts of the over-all transportation system, we will fail collectively.

"Under a regional umbrella ... the taxing, financing and planning of the transportation system not only has to be regional in nature but it must include all modes of transportation and be handled under one administrative structure.

"Otherwise," he said, "the most efficient total transportation system is an impossibility."

Which is all to suggest that, despite Savage's efforts, there will be no bus takeover until Oak Bay, Esquimalt and Saanich—much less the rest of Victoria council—opt in.

Said Times staff writer John Mika in a close look at Victoria's transportation needs published in April:

"Once transit becomes a civic function, then the whole approach to operating it could change from the present B.C. Hydro effort to forget it as an inconvenient distraction to one of meeting the need for service and economy."

Davis to Take Air View Of Soviet Fishing Fleet

Federal Fisheries Minister Jack Davis Wednesday will take an aerial view of the Russian fishing fleet operating off the coast of B.C.

Davis, accompanied by newsmen, will leave Canadian Forces Base Comox in an Argus aircraft to view the trawler fleet now operating 15 miles off Pachena Point in Barkley Sound.

Last week only five Soviet ships were reported off the coast, north of Cape Flattery at the entrance to Strait of Juan de Fuca. A fisheries patrol vessel Monday reported there are now 17 Russian and one Japanese trawlers 15 miles off Pachena.

B.C. trawlers in the past two weeks have been demanding action from Ottawa to protect Canadian fishermen from Russian harassment on

from Tofino to Cape Flattery.

Two weeks ago the anchored Port Alberni troller

Deas Isle was sideswiped twice by a huge Russian trawler.

Since then some troller owners have threatened "gun law" to drive the Russians from the fishing grounds and to protect themselves from harassment.

Davis, acting after the incident between the troller and the Russian ship, said he would spend a night or two aboard a troller to take a

of night anchoring on the fishng banks.

SO FAR IN A WEEK still young, two servants of the public have come out with statements better left unmade.

The first to cram his foot into his mouth was United States President Richard Nixon, who while jawing the press on its sins, committed a no-no of the sort that newsmen are careful to avoid.

With the Manson case still before the courts, the president

arrived at his own guilty verdict — a gaffe that no later slip-of-the-tongue explanation can excuse.

And here on our own turf,

Highways Minister Wesley

Black delivered himself of some views on ferry passenger responsibility that should cause a general raising of eyebrows.

and a ferry is a ship whether the minister believes it or not — can reasonably expect just such aid and reassur-ances as Black listed. If they weren't forthcoming on Sunday in Active Pass, I suggest the travelling public has a right to know why, and the

Obviously, if Victoria-Vancouver ferry crews are too small to cope with such demands as the service may impose on them, the answer seems plain enough.

Instead of criticizing the passengers who use a high-fare service, like the ferry crews up to at least adequate

I HAVE NEVER THOUGHT of the herons that fish low-tide flats so patiently as anything but clumsy fliers.

They flap along, their skinny legs trailing behind them, and as they go, they assault the air with one of nature's less musical voices.

But what we saw on a tide flat a while ago has given me

Regional Takeover of Buses Sought by City Alderman

Saanich Joins Fight To Keep Bus Routes

Saanich Peninsula municipalities will join forces to oppose the end of bus services by Vancouver Island Coach Lines.

Saanich council, meeting Monday night, agreed to join with its northern neighbors — Central Saanich, North Saanich and Sidney.

Written objections must be submitted by Aug. 17 to the Public Utilities Commission in Vancouver. VICL proposed to end service to Sidney, Deep Cove, West Saanich and Cordova Bay effective Sept. 15, claiming losses of more than $100,000 a year.

PROTEST FORM

Saanich also agreed to have its clerks and solicitor draw up a protest form which will be placed in several locations and then send them to the Public Utilities Commission before the deadline.

The forms, for residents to fill in, will be available at Cordova Bay, Prospect Lake, Royal Oak, Sayward and Patricia Bay Highway and the municipal hall.

Five persons wrote council, all opposed to VICL's plans.

Donald Hammer, 5620 Patricia Bay Highway, came to council to say there are a number of older people in the Sayward area who will have no way of shopping or visiting the doctor and dentist without the bus.

"You can't expect people over 70 to buy cars or walk," he said.

RESISTED

J. W. Griffith, 5024 Wesley Road, said that over the last 10 years transit companies have "resisted any modernization or improvement" or extension of service" and if there is a falling off of revenue, the blame is with them.

ALD. WILLIAM CAMPBELL

VICL "can run some sort of service, subsidized by their other routes."

Ald. Foster Isherwood said VICL has maintained a schedule which does not encourage traffic.

MORE PROTESTS

Between 50 and 60 protests have been received by the superintendent of motor carriers, Public Utilities Commission, up to Monday and more were arriving today.

TRY THIS

Mirrors Help Stretch Small Rooms

Tricks play a part in every man's trade. In some trades, the tricks are short cuts, the easy way to accomplish an objective. In other trades, it is knowing how to do a job faster than the ordinary way.

In the design field, many tricks are optical illusions. In other words, space planning can make rooms seem larger, and color choices can expand or diminish a room. These usually require technical knowledge, but the average person can use mirrors skillfully for optical illusions.

designed by architect Ed Malone, what appears to be a long hall on the right is a mirrored door and mirrored panel above that reflect the picture gallery wall. Upon examination, one sees the ledge with its art objects duplicated, and the black cushion stacks as well.

The door swings away from the living room and into the bedroom wing. But what a nice deception that adds depth to a quite small room.

Note the cork covers the other two walls, which, because of the dark color, tend to close the room in, in spite of the white sloping ceiling, so the mirrored panel offers welcome relief. Also, because the mirrors are at the side, as people move around in the room, they do not see their reflections.

Another trade trick that gives space to the room is the minimum pieces of furniture used. Two large sofas and two cushion stacks offer as much seating as a sofa and several chairs, but without the clutter and without breaking up floor space. The glass topped coffee table, too, is practically non-existent thanks to its see-through quality.

Recipes for Campers

Minced beef has been a stable food for campers for many years as an easy way to provide a good meal.

Here are two one-pot meals for quick hearty dinners. Campers' Spaghetti and Quick Chili Con Carne are a welcome change from hamburgers and are just as quick to prepare.

Here are a few tips for transporting minced beef.

Freeze it before putting it in your cooler and it will help keep other perishables cool. A two-pound package will stay frozen longer than two one-pound packages.

The meat should be cooked when it has partially or completely thawed. If it cannot be eaten immediately, then cook it for use the following day. Take along some small plastic containers to store the meat in your cooler. Otherwise, everything will begin to smell of cooked hamburger.

CAMPERS' SPAGHETTI

1 lb. minced beef
2 tbsp. fat
1 28-oz. can spaghetti and tomato sauce

1 10-oz. can mushrooms, undrained
1 7-oz. can kernel corn, undrained
1 tbsp. chili powder
1 tsp. salt
1/2 tsp. pepper
1/2 cup grated cheddar cheese

Combine onion and beef and brown in fat about five minutes. Add spaghetti and tomato sauce, mushrooms, corn and seasonings. Cover and simmer 15 minutes. Sprinkle with cheese. Serves six.

QUICK CHILI CON CARNE
1/2 lb. minced beef
2 tbsp. fat
1/2 tsp. chili powder
1/2 tsp. salt
1/2 tsp. pepper
1/2 tsp. oregano
2 10-oz. cans condensed tomato soup
2 10-oz. cans kidney beans in sauce

Combine onion in fat and brown about five minutes. Add remaining ingredients, cover and simmer until thickened, about 20 minutes. Serves six.

Involvement, Democracy Keynote At New-Style Prison for Women

TORONTO (CP) — A radical change in the lifestyle and administration of prisons is being worked for Vanier Centre for Women near Brampton, Ont., at joint meetings of the women serving sentences and the staff.

Involvement is the keynote in the institution's departure from authoritarianism.

The residents are actively involved in any decisions affecting them. Complaints are aired the decisions made in committee meetings.

The discussion is democratic within the framework of the institution's regulations. If the residents want a rule changed or an innovation made, they say so. If a rule must stick, a suitable explanation is given.

The centre is trying to give practical training the responsibilities and rights of citizenship.

Vanier, designed by Harry Kohl, a Toronto architect, accommodates the best features of North American prisons - fresh air, open spaces and bright colors. Mr. Kohl's plan allows residents and staff to mix freely and informally within the cottages and many-windowed corridors of the main administrative building.

GIVEN CHANCE FOR JOBS

The Vanier Centre is a therapeutic community. Treatment and administration are fully integrated so the residents can learn to relate rationally to people and the institutions they must cope within the outside world.

The residents also get a chance to re-establish themselves outside. They get temporary leave to apply for jobs and find lodgings before their term is up. Some are on daily leave to work or study in nearby Brampton.

Donna Clark, superintendent for Vanier, said: "I'm sure our people reflect the ills of society. We've noticed a shift in offences from alcoholism and prostitution to a real upswing in theft and false pretences."

The sentences of Vanier residents are for two years or less. Convictions for robbery, child neglect, use of drugs or assault also take them there.

"Some people are here because they are much more open than average in their reactions to life, perhaps because they're already lost everything. This gets them into trouble because nobody wants to hear what they have to say. Others have checked out of any legitimate involvement in life and we have to start from there," Miss Clark said.

"With some people, we will never be able to make headway. They've been rejected all their lives and become rebellious and aggressive early."

The 200 children in the course were selected because they were more withdrawn than their classmates in kindergarten, Grade 1 or Grade 2, or have some special language or emotional problem.

"These children just sit in the shadows and they get the crumbs from the teachers all year," says teacher Eileen Stephenson. But now the more assertive children aren't

The Vanier Centre has brought to life the words of Allan Grossman, Ontario Minister of correctional services. "To rehabilitate is to invest again with dignity; to give a woman the self-respect she so desperately needs before she can respect others... There must be socialization between inmates and the community, constructive work programs, academic upgrading..."

The citizens of Brampton are helping to provide the social relations with the community. Members of a new branch of the Elizabeth Fry Society accompany residents on job interviews and in seeking accommodation.

Tom Crothers dramatizes a story to two children at Flemington Public School in Toronto during a perception session - part of a summer course for 200 children selected because they were more withdrawn than their classmates. Through stimulation of the senses, the school attempts to draw out the children so that they will participate in their school activities to a greater degree and become better learners. (CP Photo)

Course Helps Shy Children

TORONTO (CP) — While most other schools throughout Metropolitan Toronto have settled down into the long summer silence - the Flemington public school is hopping.

The school is the scene of a volunteer summer course in perception designed to aid some of the withdrawn children in reading.

The approach is a long way from the old-style primer.

Principal James Montgomerie believes that the way to the three Rs is through the five senses and sight, hearing, smelling, tasting and feeling playing an important role in the teaching methods.

The 200 children in the course were selected because they were more withdrawn than their classmates in kindergarten, Grade 1 or Grade 2, or have some special language or emotional problem.

"These children just sit in the shadows and they get the crumbs from the teachers all year," says teacher Eileen Stephenson. But now the more assertive children aren't

HELPED BY EXERCISES

The summer course is based on learning theories developed by Purdue University psychologist N. C. Kephart, and tested by York University psychologist Harold A. Minden.

In the school auditorium he puts the children through creative drama sessions.

Victoria Women Unruffled as Ever As Storm Grows

By ROBIN BURGESS

What's happening about women's liberation closer to home?

In Victoria life goes on quietly and unruffled as usual. There is no local chapter of the Women's Caucus hidden away concocting secret plans for combating female oppression in our city.

Locally women's lib just isn't a big issue.

Mavis de Girolamo, president of the Victoria chapter of Voice of Women gave her views on why Victoria women are so apathetic.

"Victoria is a very insular city. Nothing that goes on in the world outside Vancouver Island seems to affect Victoria much. We read about poverty and we read about Indians, but nothing is really on our doorstep. I think women's lib is like that too," she said.

Whereas in most cities the local campus is the centre for radical movements such as women's liberation, Mrs. de Girolamo said she felt this same insular attitude prevails at the University of Victoria. She admitted that the Vancouver Women's Caucus member's energetic demonstrations in Ottawa did "definitely turn off" a lot of middle class, middle aged women.

"But I sympathize with those women in Ottawa. The fact that you need to be extreme to get publicity is what buys me. Voice of Women knows all about that," she said.

One local women who is turned off by the Women's Caucus "mode of operation" is Oak Bay mayor Frances Elford.

"I think there is a time, a place and a proper procedure for bringing forth your views. I don't think these other methods will bring about change in Canada," she said.

Mrs. Elford said, in her opinion, confrontations such as the women caucus' noisy meeting with Trudeau in Vancouver "defeated the whole movement."

"Women are patient people and we're going to have to continue to be patient," she said.

Mrs. Elford, who was first elected to the Oak Bay municipal council in 1963 said that she was only able to pursue her career in politics at the expense of her role as mother and homemaker.

"Perhaps there was a compensating factor in that our home was probably more interesting than if I stayed home and did housework which I hate," she said.

On the subject of women in politics she said: "There seems to be a funny little attitude among male aldermen, that one woman on a council is fine, but two women?"

Women's liberation, says another Victoria woman Wavene Burchill, is "just nonsense."

"I never felt I suffered from discrimination. Though I suppose that's because I wasn't horribly ambitious," she said.

Women Drive Aussie Buses

Sydney, Australia (Reuters) — Women will soon be driving Sydney buses following a transport department decision to train about 200 of its 600 women conductors as drivers. A union official, approving the move, said women had proved their efficiency in driving heavy vehicles during the Second World War.

of the Victoria Low Income group said she agreed with the Vancouver Women's Caucus stand that women are forced to go on welfare because society refuses to provide them with day-care centres for their children, job training, and decently paying jobs.

A woman's burdens are more than a man's. It's she that holds the purse strings of the family and has to worry about feeding and clothing the children," said Miss Pilon.

She said that she would like to see a local women's liberation group working together with the Low Income group to form a women's protection group.

It was in honor of the fact

'Shock' Tactics Justified, Caucus Members Claim

In the second of two articles on the women's liberation movement in Vancouver, members discuss past confrontations and future plans of the Vancouver Women's Caucus.

By ROBIN BURGESS

Say "women's liberation" and a majority of Canadians have an immediate, extreme reaction — passionate approval or equally passionate condemnation.

Vancouver newspapers first woke to the fact that a movement with incredibly good news potential was growing right under their noses Oct. 24, 1969.

On that day the Vancouver Women's Caucus staged their first militant demonstration protesting the Engineer's Club's no-women policy.

The now-famous abortion caravan and the Parliament Hill confrontation in May was described in dramatic detail by press gallery reporters, all male.

Now, in the aftermath of that stormy campaign, Mary Trew, one of the Caucus members who participated in the caravan attempted to justify the women's "shock" tactics in Ottawa.

"I wouldn't really say our tactics turned women off. I think many of them admired us for our courage," said Mary.

Polite Indifference

She stressed that the women involved in the caravan pleaded their case exhaustively through all the legitimate channels but met only polite indifference.

"The whole week we were in Ottawa we had open meetings. We'd sent telegrams weeks in advance to Ralph Loffmark, John Turner and the Prime Minister asking them to attend but they all sent back replies saying they were too busy."

"I happen to know that Turner was playing tennis at the time of our biggest open meeting," she said.

The only MP to consent to see them was Grace MacInnis, member of Parliament for Vancouver-Kingsway and the only woman in the House.

Women today, said Mrs. Murrison, don't have the "get up and go" to think beyond home and family.

She said that she really doesn't approve of the tactics used by the Vancouver Women's Caucus during their abortion campaign but added: "At times I feel so exasperated I feel like leaping up and shouting myself."

Henrietta Pilon, a member

"We knew that the only way to be heard was to chain ourselves to chairs in the visitors gallery," said Mary vehemently.

Whenever the caravan stopped along the way to Ottawa, the Caucus members staged open meetings.

The object, she said, was to explain to women all across Canada that abortion is part of the whole women's liberation issue. "The right to free abortion on demand, the right to control of our own bodies, is the first essential step to control of our own lives . . . said Mary.

Other Women's Caucus campaigns included a six-week public lecture series on women's liberation, and a demonstration in December protesting wage discrimination against female postal workers.

Protest Candidate

Early in the new year some of the younger members of the Caucus launched one of their most imaginative campaigns to date.

Under pressure from women liberationists on campus, Simon Fraser University student council agreed to send one of their members, Janice Jollett, to the Miss Canadian University contest in Waterloo, Ont., as a protest candidate.

It was in December, 1969, that the first mention of the Women's Caucus abortion information clinic appeared in the local press.

Now, nine months later, the abortion clinic is the only project on which the Caucus members and members of the splinter Women's Liberation Movement continue to work together.

The clinic operates currently as a counselling service to guide women through the labyrinth of red tape involved in getting a therapeutic abortion under the new "liberalized" abortion laws.

The whole process, said Jan, from the time the woman comes into the abortion clinic until the abortion is over, usually takes from two to three weeks.

The Women's Caucus counsellors continue to provide moral support every step of the way, she said.

Their list of sympathetic

The Caucus' campaign to educate and organize working women in Vancouver is well under way, she said.

In July, members of the working women's workshop launched the first of a five part series of discussions of women's liberation directed specifically at working women.

At a recent meeting of the workshop the women planned humorous skits portraying typical office situations — for the next discussion on the male-female roles in the office.

QUEEN MUM 70 TODAY

Type-Cast in Royal Role

By THOMAS A. REEDY

LONDON (AP) — Elizabeth Bowes-Lyon, who became a queen, the mother of a queen and the grandmother of a prospective king, reaches her 70th birthday today.

Formally, she is "Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth, the Queen Mother." She loves people, wears hats that a lot of Britons consider dreadful and says pish-tosh to doctors about the gooey cakes she likes.

The daughter of the 14th Earl of Strathmore, she is descended from a long line of Scottish chieftains. She became Queen in 1936 and Queen Mother when George VI's death in 1952 brought Elizabeth II to the throne.

The cloak of royalty has always fitted her. Her sheer friendliness and talent for making the nervous relax are legendary.

CAN BE SHARP

But those who think her ready smile is something saccharine learn better if they ever are tempted to be just a bit familiar. Royal equestrians have kept secret any number of occasions when the "Queen Mum" put somebody in the old icedbox with a razor-thrust remark.

The 70th birthday is likely to be quiet. The Queen Mother intends to come back to London from Sandringham Palace in Norfolk for a family party at Buckingham Palace.

In a way, it's her second birthday party of the year. Recently, she joined her brother-in-law, the Duke of Gloucester, and Lord Mountbatten of Burma at a gay celebration in Windsor Castle. It was in honor of the fact that all three were reaching 70 this year.

Her daughter, the Queen, leans on her more than many realize. They consult frequently, perhaps on only a question of propriety. And there are centres to be opened, ships to be launched, groups to be visited, regiments to be reviewed and countries to be visited.

Stranded French Youths

'Victims of Deception'

Ottawa (CP) — Sixty French students stranded in Toronto without funds or work permits are "innocent victims of a bit of deception," a spokesman for Manpower Minister Allan MacEachen said today.

The department is considering laying charges against the "unscrupulous operators" who brought them to Canada for tobacco harvesting, the spokesman said.

The students say they were told by the Canadian embassy in Paris that work permits would be issued to them when they arrived in Canada.

The spokesman for Mr. MacEachen said that Frenchman and a travel agency operating in Canada combined to bring the students to Canada although they had been warned beforehand that the young people would not be permitted to

"There is no point in looking for it," an officer told him, "they ate him."

The man described his dog as a "big poodle, the most intelligent and the most faithful of the canine species."

Police found a dog's carcass Monday amid the rubble left by festival fans as they strolled home Sunday night.

The spokesman said that easy presidential access to television represents a "dangerous, unchecked power."

"There is nothing in the constitution which says that, of all elected officials, the president alone shall have the right to communicate with the American people," Fulbright, chairman of the Senate foreign relations committee, said.

He commented in testimony prepared for a Senate communications subcommittee which opened hearings into a bill he is sponsoring to require television networks to provide Congress and the judiciary a minimum of four free opportunities each year to place their views before the public.

The students entered the United States and crossed into Canada at Quebec City two weeks ago on students visitors permits. Their permits expired Saturday.

Persecuted Vietnamese Make Dramatic Exodus From Cambodia

By T. D. ALLMAN

PHNOM PENH (WP) — Four months ago, the Vietnamese minority here was the mortar of Phnom Penh's social and economic structure — clerks, electricians, plumbers, bricklayers, small shopkeepers, teachers and traders. They formed the most bourgeoisie elements of a typical Southeast Asian trading town. The Chinese were above — richer and more ingratiating — and the Cambodians were either far above them — government officials and the aristocracy — or below them — laborers and peasants.

Then came the change in government and war; their persecution followed. The ostensible reason was that they were an ironic accusation against such a capitalistic class of people. The real reason was racial hatred as old as the history of warfare in Indochina.

PROPERTY SEIZED

Their property was seized, or purchased for a fraction of its real value. They were arrested, or thrown into camps, where they languished for months without proper food or medical care and in fear of massacre or death by epidemic.

Then this week, in a dramatic exodus, 8,500 members of Cambodia's dwindling disowned Vietnamese minority started down the Mekong River to sanctuary in their ancestral homeland.

For days they crowded the banks of the Mekong, and finally, just after dawn Friday 300 or more boats, piled high with humanity and personal effects, were set adrift on the river. It will take them more than two days to reach Can Tho, in the South Vietnamese delta.

Friday's exodus brought the total of Vietnamese to leave Phnom Penh by river to the more than 70,000, and the total to leave Phnom Penh altogether to about 110,000. Government officials estimate that, in all, some 200,000 Vietnamese are still in Cambodia, some of them leading normal lives, others in camps, still others hiding in the jungle.

recover for years. But the exodus has had at least one desirable effect — one of several causes of tension between the Cambodians and their South Vietnamese allies is gradually being eliminated.

Camps crowded

Originally, about 140,000 Vietnamese were crowded into 19 camps surrounding Phnom Penh. In one of them, the compound of the Providence Nunnery, 12,000 people were packed into a one-city block area without proper sanitation or health facilities.

"People were obliged to bathe, relieve themselves, and drink water in the river," recalled one Vietnamese Catholic nun this week. "The old and the very young were the worst victims. They could not adjust to the crowding, the infection and filth. We lost scores of old people and babies in our camp alone, carried away by fever and pneumonia."

New Washington Attorney Devastatingly Effective

SEATTLE (AP) — The way U.S. Attorney Stan Pitkin has come on like gangbusters as federal prosecutor in Western Washington has surprised many in the Seattle area.

In this short time Pitkin has stripped away the cover from what may be a 30-year-old police payoff system; gained the conviction of a retired assistant police chief for perjury in connection with the alleged system, caused the indictment of a former King County sheriff for perjury and indictment of a well-known area businessman for violation of the federal antiracketeering statute.

Pitkin's federal grand jury probe has thrown cold water on the claims top Western Washington officials have made for years — that there is no organized crime here.

"I think I'm an idealist," Pitkin says. "I refuse to believe there is something like a brick wall — that there's got to be a way to get things done, but you have to have the will."

"It is a notorious fault of political figures to avoid making waves, to avoid tackling the big, ugly problems of our society," he says.

Pitkin, born and raised in California, moved to Bellingham, Wash., in 1965 after graduating from Vanderbilt University Law School. He was admitted to the Washington state bar in early 1966.

He began his political life there in mid-1966 when a small group of Republicans talked him into becoming the party's candidate for prosecuting attorney.

He won with the campaign promise he would become the country's first "full-time"

'NATIONALIZE RESOURCES'

NDP Waffle Group Plans Strategy

TORONTO (CP) — The radical wing of the New Democratic Party established guidelines at its first national conference for a battle to nationalize Canada's resource industries.

The three-day conference which wound up Monday night also established a 10-member campaign committee to sell the ideology of the so-called Waffle Group to other members of the party.

If the committee's planned cross-country tours are successful, a candidate will be selected in November to contest the party leadership to be vacated by T. C. Douglas at a national NDP convention in Ottawa in April.

The conference also discussed the Waffle Group's role in the women's liberation movement and how to establish more local control for the Canadian sections of international unions. No firm decisions were taken on either issue.

Office Workers Paid Less Here

NEW YORK (AP) — The average office employee in the United States earns $105 a week while his Canadian counterpart makes $89 a week, a survey released Monday shows.

The survey of salaries, which is conducted annually by the American Administrative Management Society, indicates that salaries this year are three to eight per cent higher than in 1969 for 17 of the most representative jobs in both countries.

A top key punch operator in the U.S. earns $106 a week, or seven per cent more than a year ago, the survey found. Typist-clerks are making $33 or eight per cent more, while book-keeping machine operators are earning $99 or 7.6 per cent more.

The salary of the average clerical worker in the U.S. over the last 10 years has increased 44 per cent to $105 a week from $73, the society said. In Canada, the average weekly pay has jumped 54 per cent to $89 from $58 a decade ago.

Victoria Women Unruffled as Ever As Storm Grows

By ROBIN BURGESS

What's happening about women's liberation closer to home?

In Victoria life goes on quietly and unruffled as usual. There is no local chapter of the Women's Caucus hidden away concocting secret plans for combating female oppression in our city.

Locally women's lib just isn't a big issue.

Mavis de Girolamo, president of the Victoria chapter of Voice of Women gave her views on why Victoria women are so apathetic.

"Victoria is a very insular city. Nothing that goes on in the world outside Vancouver Island seems to affect Victoria much. We read about poverty and we read about Indians but nothing is really on our doorstep. I think women's lib is like that, too," she said.

Whereas in most cities the local campus is the centre for radical movements such as women's liberation, Mrs. de Girolamo said she felt this same insular attitude prevails at the University of Victoria.

She admitted that the Vancouver Women's Caucus member's energetic demonstrations in Ottawa did "definitely turn off" a lot of middle class, middle aged women.

"But I sympathize with those women in Ottawa. The fact that you need to be extreme to get publicity is what buys me. Voice of Women knows all about that," she said.

One local woman who is turned off by the Woman's Caucus "mode of operation" is Oak Bay mayor Frances Elford.

"I think there is a time, a place and a proper procedure for bringing forth your views. I don't think these other methods will bring about change in Canada," she said.

Mrs. Elford said, in her opinion, confrontations such as the women caucus' noisy meeting with Trudeau in Vancouver "defeated the whole movement."

"Women are patient people and we're going to have to continue to be patient," she said.

Mrs. Elford, who was first elected to the Oak Bay municipal council in 1963 said that she was only able to pursue her career in politics at the expense of her role as mother and homemaker.

"Perhaps there was a compensating factor in that our home was probably more interesting than if I stayed home and did housework which I hate," she said.

On the subject of women in politics she said: "There seems to be a funny little attitude among male aldermen, that one woman on a council is fine, but two women?"

Women's liberation, says another Victoria woman Waverley Burchill, is "just nonsense."

Women Drive Aussie Buses

SYDNEY, Australia (Reuters) — Women will soon be driving Sydney buses following a transport department decision to train about 200 of its 600 women conductors as drivers. A union official, approving the move, said women had proved their efficiency in driving heavy vehicles during the Second World War.

of the Victoria Low Income group said she agreed with the Vancouver Women's Caucus stand that women are forced to go on welfare because society refuses to provide them with day-care centres for their children, job training, and decently paying jobs.

A woman's burdens are more than a man's. It's she that holds the purse strings of the family and has to worry about feeding and clothing the children," said Miss Pilon.

She said that she would like to see a local women's liberation group working together with the Low Income group to form a women's protection group.

Women's liberation, says another Victoria woman Waverley Burchill, is "just nonsense."

"I never felt I suffered from discrimination. Though I suppose that's because I wasn't horribly ambitious," she said.

'Shock' Tactics Justified, Caucus Members Claim

In the second of two articles on the women's liberation movement in Vancouver, members discuss past confrontations and future plans of the Vancouver Women's Caucus.

By ROBIN BURGESS

VANCOUVER — Say women's liberation" and a majority of Canadians have an immediate, extreme reaction — passionate approval or equally passionate, condemnation.

Vancouver newspapers first woke to the fact that a movement with incredibly good news potential was growing right under their noses Oct. 24, 1969.

That day the Vancouver Women's Caucus staged their first militant demonstration protesting the Engineers' Club's no-women policy.

The now-famous abortion caravan and the Parliament Hill confrontation in May was described in dramatic detail by press gallery reporters, all male.

Now, in the aftermath of that stormy campaign, Mary Trew, one of the Caucus members who participated in the caravan attempted to justify the women's "shock" tactics in Ottawa.

"I wouldn't really say our tactics turned women off. I think many of them admired us for our courage," said Mary.

Polite Indifference

She stressed that the women involved in the caravan pleaded their case exhaustively through all the legitimate channels but met only polite indifference.

"The whole week we were in Ottawa we had open meetings. We'd sent telegrams weeks in advance to Ralph Lofmark, John Turner and the Prime Minister asking them to attend but they all sent back replies saying they were too busy."

"I happen to know that Turner was playing tennis at the time of our biggest open meeting," she said.

The only MP to consent to see them was Grace MacInnis, member of Parliament for Vancouver-Kingsway and the only woman in the House.

She said that she really doesn't approve of the tactics used by the Vancouver Women's Caucus during their abortion campaign but added:

"At times I feel so exasperated I feel like leaping up and shouting myself."

Henrietta Pilon, a member

"We knew that the only way to be heard was to chain ourselves to chairs in the visitors gallery," said Mary vehemently.

Whenever the caravan stopped along the way to Ottawa, the Caucus members staged open meetings.

The object, she said, was to explain to women all across Canada that abortion is part of the whole women's liberation issue. "The right to free abortion on demand, the right to control of our own bodies, is the first essential step to control of our own lives . . . said Mary.

Other Women's Caucus campaigns included a six-week public lecture series on women's liberation, and a demonstration in December protesting wage discrimination against female postal workers.

Protest Candidate

Early in the new year some of the younger members of the Caucus launched one of their most imaginative campaigns to date.

Under pressure from women liberationists on campus, Simon Fraser University student council agreed to send one of their members, Janiel Jollet, to the Miss Canadian University contest in Waterloo, Ont., as a protest candidate.

It was in December, 1969, that the first mention of the Women's Caucus abortion information clinic appeared in the local press.

Now, nine months later, the abortion clinic is the only project on which the Caucus members and members of the splinter Women's Liberation Reform Committee, to fight for the removal of abortion from the Criminal code.

"I had masses of support for my campaign. Women phoned to say 'We're with you. We support you.' But do you think the Abortion Reform Committee got any support? Not on your life!" said Mrs. Morrison, in a recent interview.

"It's apathy, that's what it is," she said. "Not just Victoria women but women in general don't have the courage of their convictions."

The only MP to consent to see them was Grace MacInnis, member of Parliament for Vancouver-Kingsway and the only woman in the House.

She stressed that she really doesn't approve of the tactics used by the Vancouver Women's Caucus during their abortion campaign but added:

QUEEN MUM 70 TODAY

Type-Cast in Royal Role

By THOMAS A. REEDY

LONDON (AP) — Elizabeth Bowes-Lyon, who became a queen, the mother of a queen and the grandmother of a prospective king, reaches her 70th birthday today.

Formally, she is "Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth, the Queen Mother." She loves people, wears hats that a lot of Britons consider dreadful and says pish-tosh to doctors about the goey cakes she likes.

The daughter of the 14th Earl of Strathmore, she is descended from a long line of Scottish chieftains. She became Queen in 1936 and Queen Mother when George VI's death in 1952 brought Elizabeth II to the throne.

The cloak of royalty has always fitted her. Her sheer friendliness and talent for making the nervous relax are legendary.

CAN BE SHARP

But those who think her ready smile is something saccharine learn better if they ever are tempted to be just a bit familiar. Royal equeires have kept secret any number of occasions when the "Queen Mum" put somebody in the old icedbox with a razor-thrust remark.

The 70th birthday is likely to be quiet. The Queen Mother intends to come back to London from Sandringham Palace in Norfolk for a family party at Buckingham Palace.

In a way, it's her second birthday party of the year. Recently, she joined her brother-in-law, the Duke of Gloucester, and Lord Mountbatten of Burma at a gay celebration in Windsor Castle. It was in honor of the fact that all three were reaching 70 this year.

Her daughter, the Queen, leans on her more than many realize. They consult frequently, perhaps on only a question of propriety. And there are centres to be opened, ships to be launched, groups to be visited, regiments to be reviewed and countries to be visited.

MOM IS AGAINST WOMEN'S LIBERATION

—AP Wirephoto

Marie de Pasquale, of New York, a part-time legal secretary, displays button advertising the organization she founded, MOM, or Men Our Masters, as a counter to women's liberation groups. MOM says that a woman's place is in the home and that the women's liberationists "haven't the vaguest concept of what sex is," says Miss de Pasquale, who founded her group last March.

Caucus member Andrea Lebowitz.

A Caucus workshop is organizing a high school women's liberation conference on Aug. 8 and 9 to discuss questions such as "Why does the media create the 'sweet sixteen' image?", "Why housewives and not astronauts?", "Why are there no birth control classes in the schools?".

The Caucus' campaign to educate and organize working women in Vancouver is well under way, she said.

In July, members of the working women's workshop launched the first of a five part series of discussions of women's liberation directed specifically at working women.

At a recent meeting of the workshop the women planned humorous skits portraying typical office situations — for the next discussion on the male-female roles in the office.

In the first skit a woman applies for a secretarial job at the offices of a fictitious firm, "Skull Oil Co."

not responsible

Every Man for Himself Aboard B.C. Ferries—Black

Highways Minister Wesley Black says it's every man for himself when it comes to locating lifejackets and other life-saving equipment in emergencies aboard B.C. ferries.

Black, minister responsible for the ferry service, was commenting on claims by passengers on the Queen of Victoria that crew members did not keep them informed on what was happening or what emergency procedures were to be followed after it was hit by a Soviet freighter Sunday.

"When I get on the ferry, it is my responsibility to know where the lifejackets are," he said.

"The diagrams are there, how to put them on. People for their own safety are supposed to do that."

Three ferry passengers, including a seven-month-old baby boy, died when the sharp bow of the 14,700-ton Sergey Yesenin sliced into the mid-section of the ship.

Black said:

"As far as information from the bridge is concerned, the person in command was on the bridge. The responsibility he had would have been pretty terrific and he did the right thing all the way down the piece."

He said a worse tragedy may have been avoided because of the coolness of the crew.

Black sent message to the captain and crew of the Queen of Victoria, congratulating them on the "excellent job" they did.

Asked if in an emergency such as Sunday's collision, someone should have advised the passengers on the situation and subsequent procedures, Mr. Black said:

"Yes, that is so, but how do you account for human error? Leaving the iodine bottle open in the bathroom, leaving roller skates under the staircase, and so on?"

"You can't win them all."

you can't provide for every emergency no matter how well-trained your people are, and our people are well trained, despite what passengers might say."

The minister said the lack of information given to passengers over the ship's public address system was a factor in avoiding panic.

The ship's captain, busy with more urgent problems, "kept his cool" in the moments after the crash.

Black said:

"There was no announcement to panic people," he said.

Ceasefire May Exceed Target

UNITED NATIONS (CP)—Gunnar V. Jarring, the UN special Middle East mediator, engaged in intensive behind-the-scenes activity today amid predictions a 90-day Arab-Israeli ceasefire will be proclaimed before the end of the week.

Israeli Pullout Possible

JERUSALEM (CP)—Israel has told the United States the withdrawal of its forces from Arab territory occupied in the 1967 war "will be determined in the peace agreement" with the Arab states, Premier Golda Meir announced today.

An Arab source said the forthcoming peace talks for which Jarring was preparing himself could be protracted.

Indirect Arab-Israeli peace negotiations could take place in New York, a course of action said to be favored by some Arab diplomats.

The peace plan was presented last month by U.S. State Secretary William Rogers and has been accepted by Israel, Egypt and Jordan.

It is the basis of Jarring's current efforts.

ACTING AS NEGOTIATOR

Libyan leader Muammar

Kadafi spent Monday in Baghdad trying to smooth out differences between Egypt and Iraq, which denounced the plan as a sellout.

Kadafi spent 18 hours in Iraq but apparently failed to iron out the dispute between the two countries. Baghdad radio declared that Iraqis would "resist the American plan to the end."

A strategy conference of Arab defence and foreign ministers was postponed to await the outcome of Kadafi's peace-making.

GAHAL QUITTS

In Tel Aviv, the right-wing

Gahal party voted Monday night to quit Premier Golda Meir's coalition government in protest of Kadafi's acceptance of the plan. The walkout was not expected to affect Israeli policy since the other coalition parties still control 72 of the 120 seats in Israel's parliament.

Gahal's decision to leave the government came about by such a narrow majority following a stormy meeting of its central committee that some observers felt its liberal wing might break away. The vote was 117 to 112.

Jarring arranged separate meetings today with chief UN delegates—Abdullah El-Erian of Egypt, Mohammad El-Farra of Jordan and Yosef Takah of Israel.

OTHER MEETINGS

He also planned to meet with the UN ambassadors from the Big Four nations—the United States, Britain, France and the Soviet Union—who have been trying for months to agree on a peace formula for the Middle East.

Meanwhile, the Israeli military command announced that one of its warplanes was shot down Monday during a raid on Egyptian anti-aircraft missile bases in the central sector of the Suez canal.

MONTEVIDE, Uruguay (Reuters)—A kidnapped American security official and a Brazilian diplomat today faced the prospect of prolonged captivity after the government rejected guerrilla demands for the release of political prisoners in exchange for their freedom.

The Tupamaros urban guerrilla organization demanded that the government release all political prisoners in Uruguayan jails and send them to Cuba, Mexico or Peru.

Building Action Perks Up But Well Below 1969 Pace

Construction activity in Greater Victoria picked up slightly in July, but remained well down for the first seven months of this year.

RETURN TO WORK

Figures for July were up due partly to the return to work by building workers July 27 after a three-month lockout.

No figures were available from North Saanich, Sidney and Langford-Colwood-Metchosin.

In Victoria, the value of building permits issued during July was almost 50 per cent less than the value of those issued in the same month last year.

A total of 483 permits were issued last month for a value of $2,106,903. In July 1969, 526 permits were issued at a total value of $4,124,055.

This is also evident in the figures for the first seven months of each year.

Last year, 3,843 permits worth $22,341,877 had been issued at the end of July against 3,129 permits worth $13,719,906 issued in the first seven months of 1970.

Seven-month figures, last year's in brackets:

Esquimalt $1.74 million ($2.72 million); Oak Bay $1.9 million ($5.5 million); Central Saanich $1.1 million ($5.9 million).

still young, two servants of the public have come out with statements better left unmade.

The first to cram his foot into his mouth was United States President Richard Nixon, who while jawing the press on his sins, committed a no-no of the sort that newsmen are careful to avoid.

With the Manson case still before the courts, the president arrived at his own guilty verdict—a gaffe that no later slip-of-the-tongue excuse can excuse.

And here on our own turf, Highways Minister Wesley Black delivered himself of some views on ferry passenger responsibility that should cause a general raising of eyebrows.

The burden of the minister's ramble is that in such emergencies as Sunday's ship-ferry collision, Dogwood fleet passengers should know where the lifejackets are racked, get into them with the aid of diagrams, and find their way unguided to the muster stations.

And while so doing, they needn't expect communications from the bridge, since these might panic them.

As a reply to criticisms leveled by some passengers after the incident, Black's utterances are anything but reassuring. I suggest further that they are largely twaddle.

Passengers on shipboard and a ferry is a ship whether the minister believes so or not—can reasonably expect just such aid and reassurance as Black listed. If they weren't forthcoming on Sunday in Active Pass, I suggest the travelling public has a right to know why, and the minister a duty to perform.

Obviously, if Victoria-Vancouver ferry crews are too small to cope with such demands as the service may impose on them, the answer seems plain enough.

Instead of criticizing the passengers who use a high-fare service, like the ferry crews up to at least adequate numbers.

I HAVE NEVER THOUGHT of the herons that fish low-tide flats so patiently as anything but clumsy fliers. They flap along, their skinny legs trailing behind them, and as they go, they assault the air with one of nature's less musical voices.

But what we saw on a tide flat a while ago has given me a new slant on heron flight capability.

The tide was well out, and a lean heron stood on one leg waiting to spear any small fish that ventured within range of its dagger beak.

Trying for a closer look at this absorbed fisherman, we approached cautiously. But caution is a well-developed heron quality, and while we were still half the length of the beach away, the bird took off in a awkward-seeming flight.

It flapped, croaking, on a long slant that barely cleared the wooded bluffs. Then it began to gain altitude in a series of wide spirals.

We waited for it to level off, but it continued to climb. When we lost sight of him, old long-neck was up where we'd thought only hawks and eagles flew.

The heron diminished to the merest speck against a puff of white cumulus cloud, and was still putting air beneath its wings when we lost sight of it.

IF YOU HAVE A TASTE for legitimate theatre in its happier aspects, don't miss Victoria Fair's interpretation of the Bernard Shaw minoplay, Androcles and the Lion, when it next comes up.

Better still, take your children along, if you have 'em, for an evening with live actors who offer a spirited and well-directed performance at the McPherson.

Even if some of Shaw's fun-poking is lost on them, they'll like his zany set of Christian martyrs, his Establishment Romans, and his Androcles.

Most of all, they'll like that wonderful lion!

'Every Man for Himself on B.C. Ferries'

Highways Minister Wesley Black says it's every man for himself when it comes to locating lifejackets and other life-saving equipment in emergencies aboard B.C. ferries.

Black, minister responsible for the ferry service, was commenting on claims by passengers on the Queen of Victoria that crew members did not keep them informed on what was happening or what emergency procedures were to be followed after it was hit by a Soviet freighter Sunday.

"When I get on the ferry, it is my responsibility to know where the lifejackets are," he said.

"It is my responsibility wherever I sit to know where the muster station is. We don't carry enough crew to provide and hand out lifejackets to people.

"The diagrams are there, how to put them on. People for their own safety are supposed to do that."

Three ferry passengers, including a seven-month-old baby boy, died when the sharp bow of the 14,700-ton Sergey Yesenin sliced into the mid-section of the ship.

Black said: "As far as information from the bridge is concerned, the person in command was on the bridge . . . The responsibility he had would have been pretty terrific and he did the right thing all the way down the piece."

He said a worse tragedy may have been avoided because of the coolness of the crew.

Black sent a message to the captain and crew of the Queen of Victoria, congratulating them on the "excellent job" they did.

Asked if in an emergency such as Sunday's collision, someone should have advised the passengers on the situation and subsequent procedures, Mr. Black said:

"Yes, that is so, but how do you account for human error? Leaving the iodine bottle open in the bathroom, leaving roller skates under the stairs, and so on?"

"You can't win them all,

you can't provide for every emergency no matter how well-trained your people are and our people are well-trained, despite what passengers might say."

The minister said the lack of information given to passengers over the ship's public address system was a factor in avoiding panic.

The ship's captain, busy with more urgent problems, "kept his cool" in the moments after the "crash."

Black said:

"There was no announcement to panic people," he said.

On complaints that crew members didn't tell passengers where to find lifejackets, Black said:

"It's perfectly obvious that the crew cannot wait hand and foot on every passenger on a ship."

Israeli Pullout Possible

JERUSALEM (CP)—Israel has told the United States the withdrawal of its forces from Arab territory occupied in the 1967 war "will be determined in the peace agreement" with the Arab states, Premier Golda Meir announced today.

Informing the Knesset (parliament) of her government's detailed reply to the U.S. peace plan, Mrs. Meir made it clear that no Israeli soldier will be withdrawn from the present ceasefire lines until a binding agreement is reached.

"The ceasefire lines will be replaced only by secure and recognized boundaries in a contractual peace," she said.

The mention of the word "withdrawal" in the Israeli reply is believed to be the first time it has been officially mentioned by the Israeli government.

The government coalition lost its second largest group of supporters as it easily defeated a no-confidence motion by a vote of 64 to 5 over its acceptance of the U.S. peace plan. The right-wing Gahal party quit the government over the issue and did not participate in the vote on the motion proposed by the small, ultra-nationalist Free Centre party.

Hurricane Blasts Through Texas

CORPUS CHRISTI, Tex. (AP)—Hurricane Celia smashed this city and nearby towns Monday night and today before battering its way into Mexico, still virile and destructive.

At least 18 persons died as Celia swept from Cuba into the U.S. coast of the Gulf of Mexico and then into Mexico. No one could count the injured here, and the shocked Corpus Christi survivors made no immediate effort to assess the huge monetary losses.

Some towns were virtually wiped out in the 145-mile-an-hour peak winds here, buildings were destroyed and show windows popped slivers of glass into the streets like shrapnel.

Four were known dead and a fifth was presumed drowned here. Celia caused one death in Cuba while she still was only a storm. On Florida's coast, 12 persons were drowned because of undershows and rough waters spawned by the hurricane.

About 25 miles northwest of Corpus Christi on the Mexican border, Celia set off a tornado in the Del Rio-Eagle Pass section that destroyed a barn and trees.

Rains of 4.25 inches fell in the area. Streets and bridges were awash in Eagle Pass
